AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

Hornless breeds of cows are coming in favor.

For oats, we would recommend fall plowing, for the start one gets on spring work by the means.

To feed, field beets will yield more milk, but carrots will make the most butter in the winter time. This is because the beets are less rich as food; the milk thinner.

The number of eggs shipped from Europe to the United States each summer principally from Antwerp and Hamburg, is reported at 20,000,000. What is the matter with the American hen.

That close observer and cultivator J. J. Thomas, is of the opinion that all farm seeds should be covered to a depth equal to three times the diameter of the seed. Write this rule on the granary door.

No kind of stock should be allowed to eat young cherry shoots, however worthless they may be. The leaves and bark of the cherry contain a considerable amount of prussic acid, which is occasionally fatal to sheep and cows left to graze where they can get it.

In keeping a horse fat there is as much in the driving as in the feed. A horse well curried and rubbed with a woolen rag afterward is sure to make a sleek-coated horse, and when well groomed is we may say, half fed. A cross and nervous driver will fill the horse with fear and dread, and will rapidly run the animal down.

A contemporary says: "Oats make hens poor and often pack in their crops, and they die. They clog up the pipe leading from the crop to the gizzard, and when this is the case, the hen gets no nourishment. Another thing—the skins or hulls of the oats clog up the gizzard and prevent its action. When the crop is packed, it is perfectly safe to cut into it and remove the contents, and then sew it up."

Notes.

A well-known Danish expert in butter and cheese making says: "In my travels thoroughout America I have been surprised so few practical butter and cheese makers in your creameries and factories who take any interest in the literature of their trade or profession. Seldom, comparatively, have I found the work of authority ready at hand or the dairy journal on the desk. Why, in our country the creamerymen and the factorymen are eager for every thing in the line of news, reports of discussions, technical papers, books—anything bearing on the work of advanced butter and cheese-making. The managers of a creamery who did not take regulary and read carefully his dairy journal would be considered lacking in a very important particular."

Usually potaeoes are the best off if dug as soon as ripe; this is especially the case in "muggy" weather or hot weather between showers. They should be stored in a cool celler, without too much light, or they will turn green and perhaps rot. To guard against rotting be careful about bruising, it being better to carry them down in baskets than to allow them to fall through a cellar window, as is often practiced later in the season. It is much cheaper to dig before grass and weeds grow between the rows. Potatoes are ready for digging as soon as the tops lie down. It is best to dig them early in the day and allow them to lie on the ground a few hours, when they should be taken to the barn and stored in a cool, dark, dry place. All diseased or injured potatoes should be removed from the lot.

Handling Apples.

It is now high time the winter apples were picked. As soon as ripe and the seeds are black, they are in the best condition for keeping, and no time should be lost in removing them from the trees and the danger of being blown off and injured by severe wind storms.

In picking and handling, their delicate structure should never be forgotten; no matter how small the bruise may be, every one detracts from their keeping qualities. No apple intended for anything but cider making or hog feeding should ever be clubbed or shaken from the trees, or when picked, thrown about or dropped into barrels, but in every operation every apple, intended for market or home use, should be handled as carefully, as if an egg; and in sorting and barreling we don't believe it pays to put up for market anything but perfect apples; the bruised and imperfect ones had better go for drying, canning, etc. In the final settlement of all things, there is no doubt but the hogs will have a fearful account against many men for depriving them of their share of the apple crop. And so will the honest packers for the loss of price, by reason of having these worthless hog apples put into the market in competition with their good fruit.—[Rural New Yorker.

How to Get Strong Lungs.

One of Philadelphia's leading physicians, a specialist in diseases of the lungs, says that imperfect respiration is at the bottom of much trouble. In such a case he shows the patient how to swell out the whole chest full and round by a deep inspiration, elevating and throwing back the shoulders; and then, when he has gotten into his lungs the last atom of air possible, to hold it in tightly for a little time, and then to to let it off slowly, blowing out every atom of it he possibly can by forcible expiration, drawing the shoulders forward and pressing in the chest to the smallest possible compass, thus throwing out almost all of the residual air, and all this through the nose, with mouth tightly closed. "Let him take half a dozen or more such forced respirations a dozen times a day," says the doctor," and he will soon double his vital capacity and relieve himself of most of his chest trouble. Such forced respiration will compel every air cell possible to freely admit wholesome air into the little spaces and to expel it also, and some air cells that do not often perform their functions healthily will be compelled to do so."

[illegible] my back! That lame back is [illegible] by kidney disease. Stop it at [illegible] Hunt's [Kidney and Liver] [illegible]

There is the story of the French criminal who died because he believed that he was being bled to death, while in reality his arms were only pricked, and a sound of trickling water made to imitate the noise of the blood flowing forth. In the same way it is recorded how Mr. Loutherbourg cured large numbers of patients by attacking the imagination. Among those who had visited him was a man who had been troubled with great pains and swellings, particularly about the loins, so that he could not walk across the room. On entering, Mr. Loutherbourg looked steadfastly at him and said: "I know your complaint; look at me." They continued looking at each other some minutes; then Mr. Loutherburg asked if he did not feel some warmth at his loins, whereupon the man replied that he did. "Then you will feel in a few minutes much greater warmth." After a short pause the man said, "I feel as if a person were pouring boiling water upon me." Still looking in his face, Mr. Loutherbourg said: "How did you come here, Sir?" "In a coach." "Then go and discharge your coach and walk back to town." The coach was discharged and the patient walked to town, and next day he walked five hours about town without fatigue. Similarly, Sydney Smith relates how the banker-poet Rogers caught a bad cold simply from imagining a window to be open, but which all the time was shut. It was a dinner party, and the great sheet of plate glass had deceived Rogers, who was sitting in what he thought to be a dangerous draught. To quote a further case; Dr. Sigmond relates how a poor woman, having applied to a physician for a cure of an affection of the breast, he gave her a prescription, which he directed should be applied to the breast. She returned at the end of a few days to offer her grateful thanks for the cure, which he had effected; but on making inquiry as to the mode of action, he ascertained that his patient had very carefully tied the prescription round her neck. Faith cures of this kind are of constant occurrence, and we know how persons, when suffering from maladies connected with the brain or nervous system, have been restored to their abnormal state of health by simple faith. Thus startling effects have occasionally followed the swallowing of such make-belief remedies as pills composed of bread or sugar. This accounts, therefore, for the cures which were wrought in days gone by, even when medicine was in a backward state, and the most absurd prescriptions were often given to patients suffering from nervous diseases—[The Gentleman's Magazine.

Economy in a Family.

There is nothing, which goes so far towards placing young people beyond the reach of poverty as economy in the management of household affairs. It matters not whether a man furnishes little or much for his family, if there is a continual leakage in his kitchen or parlor, it runs away, he knows not how, and that demon Waste, cries "more!" like the horse-leech's daughter, until he that provides has no more to give. It is the husband's duty to bring into the house, and it is the duty of the wife to see that nothing goes wrongfully out of it. The husband's interest should be the wife's care, and her greatest ambition to further his welfare or happiness, together with that of her children! This should be her chief aim and the theatre of her exploit: the bosom of her family, where she may do as much toward making a fortune as he can in the counting-room, or the work-shop.

It is not the money earned that makes a man wealthy—it is what he saves from his earnings. Self-gratification in dress, or indulgence in appetite or more company than his purse can well entertain, are equally pernicious. The first adds vanity to extravagance, the second fastens a doctor's bill to a long butcher's account and the latter brings intemperance—the worst of all evils, in its train.

A Philadelphia newspaper argues that there is no sex in trade and that the attempt of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe to form a woman's congress for the exchange of the goods of women, and the bringing of the producer and consumer together, is futile. When women enter the world laborers, it says, it is folly to try to keep them together. Their work must stand upon its merits, and will find its market precisely as the products or the men have done. This newspaper adds: "The woman's department at the New Orleans exposition remained to the last a pitiable display of crazy quilts, embroidery, etc., while the really creditable industrial exhibits by women were placed, as they should have been, side by side with those of men under their proper departments."

BETTER THAN SHE EXPECTED.

"Your letter received. In reply I am happy to say that Parker's Hair Balsam did much more for me than you said it would, or than I expected. My hair has not only stopped falling out, but the bald spots are all covered, and all my hair has grown thicker, softer and more lively than it was before my sickness a year ago. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits. 21w3

Congressmen who Smoke.

Governor Curtin smokes six imported cigars a day, which cost him seventy-five cents.

Congressman Glascock, of California, is the cigarette fiend. He smokes three packages a day.

Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky, smokes the strongest kind of three-for-a-quarter cigars.

Congressman Haynes of New York, uses a meerschaum cigar-holder which he has owned for eighteen years.

Congressman Deuster, of Michigan, always changes his brands. He is fickle in his tastes. He smokes nothing but cigarettes.

Congressman Cassidy, of Nevada, always has a cigar in his mouth, and he smokes at least a dozen a day, which cost him at least 15 cents apiece.

Congressman Tom Bayne, Arnott and David Paige smoke the very finest brands of imported cigars, but they are abundantly able to stand the expense.

Leopold Morse, the millionaire Jew Congressman of Boston, smokes imported cigars and lots of them. His favorite attitude is with his hands in his pockets and one of these cigars in his mouth.

Tom Ochiltree never uses tobacco. William Walter Phelps and Judge Kelley do not smoke, and Perry Belmont neither smokes nor chews. Ben Lefever chews constantly. Reagan, of Texas, likes good fine-cut, and Speaker Carlisle is fond of chewing tobacco known as "peach blossom."—[New York Graphic.

Gen. Gordon.

Gen. John B. Gordon, ex-senator from Georgia, has been here this week tendering an invitation to the president to visit that state. Gen. Gordon was in command when the last charge was made by the confederate forces. He entered the army from civil life, being connected with a state military organization. From a lieutenancy he rose to a lieutenant-generalship. Just before leaving his home for the army he was married to one of the most prominent ladies in the state. She accompanied him throughout the war. The general was wounded seven or eight times. On one occasion a piece of a shell gashed his face. His eyes were closed in consequence of the swelling, and he could not see his wife. He recognized her footsteps, however, as she approached him immediately after he was wounded.

"Come and look at your Irish beauty,' he exclaimed to her. He carries the scar on his cheek that resulted from that wound.

The general was exceedingly popular in his state. After the close of the war he was elected to the United States senate. He resigned from that body about five years ago on account of his poverty, being unable to keep up the expenses which his position made it necessary for him to make. He was succeeded by Joe Brown, who still retains the seat. After resigning Gordon became interested in railroad matters. I am told that within the past two years he has made and lost by speculating in railroad stocks more than $1,000,000. At present he is said to be a comparatively poor man.—[Cor. Chicago News.

Sure Death to the Rats.

Rats are a great nuisance on most farms, however well the latter may be regulated, and unless the pests are continually warred against, they will cause much damage by their gnawing propensities and appetite, as well as by their filthy habits. We have a method of catching them which is new to us, and we believe quite original on the Rural Farm. It is wonderfully effective, and never fails to secure the rodent. We use the ordinary steel trap, setting it on a level spot at any convenient place near their runs or where they "most do congregate." When set so as to spring easily, we spread over it a piece of thin, nish, white muslin, about two feet square, more or less, and over this scatter carelessly a few cookey, cake or cheese crumbs, but not too many. Having no fear of evil from a white cloth, in eating the crumbs they are sure to get into the trap, and the cloth does not in the least prevent the trap from holding them. Whenever the cloth becomes bloody or soiled, it should be changed for a fresh one, and for some reason they do not get "on to the racket," and the oldest and wisest are as easily caught as the young ones. We have caught several in succession in the same trap set in the same place, and within 15 minutes of each other. With us it is a great success; try it!—[Rural New Yorker.

In gathering wild flowers, autumn leaves, or picnicing in the woods, we are more or less exposed to danger from poisoning by ivy or other wild vines and shrubs. The poison is under certain circumstances readily absorbed by the blood, and painful swellings or eruptions are caused. Such affections Hoods Sarsaparilla readily cures, as it expels all impurities from the blood. Even in cases of poisoning by Paris green, Hood's Sarsaparilla has been remarkably successful. It should be kept constantly in the house for all blood disorders. Hood's Sarsaparilla is made by C. I. Hood & Co. Lowell, Mass., and is sold by all druggists. 100 Doses $1.

Behind a Smiling Face.

BY HAL BERTE.

Oh, laughter is a hollow mask that grief-bowed hearts oft wear
To cover up their aches and pains, and hide the seams of woe.
There's many a man whose face would show a little world of care,
But for the smiles he forces up that none but he may know.

Aye, I have known them times and times, with seeming merry hearts,
Say witty things, and write them, too, with humor's choicest grace,
Yet after all they merely played, as actors do, but parts,
And sought to hide an aching heart behind a smiling face.

Yes, he may wear a merry smile amid the giddy throng,
That very funny man you know, who makes you laugh so loud,
Whose jokes have smoothed away your cares and turned your tears to song;
But after all his smiling face may cover up a cloud.

If you could penetrate that heart which seems to you so gay,
Perchance you there would find a grief you would not think to trace.
Ah me! it seems so very strange, and yet so true alway,
That many an aching heart is hid behind a smiling face.

HIS AWFUL MISTAKE.

Dr. Wilfred Atkinson and Dr. Frederick Read sat in a pleasant room in a city hotel chatting confidentially.

Both were young, somewhere between 25 and 30, and both were enthusiastic students of the noble profession of medicine.

They had become intimate at college, and a strong friendship existed that had known no jar or break.

It was Fred Read who said:

"You will accept this offer?"

"Accept it?" cried his friend. "I should think so. It is what I want most in the world. You see, I have always been more interested in the study of insanity than in any other form of disease and to be resident physician in an asylum, where I have only made weekly visits, gives me opportunity for study that I could never have elsewhere."

"Yes, I know all that, but it will be very confining. I think I prefer general practice, after all. But you may expect to see me often. How I shall miss you, old fellow."

And then the talk drifted into other channels, until Dr. Atkinson discovered that it was time for his train to L——, where his new home and field of duty lay.

"You will come over often," he urged in parting from his friend, "and if I am busy or away make yourself at home. The grounds are large and very pleasant and if you meet any of the patients be sure those who are allowed to roam about inside the walls are harmless. Some of them are absolutely sane on every point but one; touch that and off they go. But the eyes tell the story."

"Yes; it is hard to hide it there."

"And contradiction brings out the truth. As long as the delusions are humored they are generally amiable enough, but once cross them—whew!"

"I shall come over often and hear the results of your experience. My enormous practice takes about three hours a day."

In persuance of this promise Dr. Read took the train about once a week, and spent an hour or two with his friend, finding him generally busy, as his duties included a general superintendence of the asylum, and details that were quite independent of professional work.

But Fred as he became more familiar with the place, began to share his friend's interest in the study of mental disorders, and would often spend hours, roaming through the wards and grounds, with only a few words to Dr. Atkinson.

It was when June was young, and the air soft and pleasant, that Dr. Read, strolling about in the prettiest part of the grounds, saw a lady in a summer house, whose face attracted him at once

It was a very pale face, and the large dark eyes were languid, while the slender figure seemed weak, as if from recent illness.

But it was, too, a beautiful young face shaded by waving brown hair, and purely oval outline and regular features.

"A new patient," was Fred's mental exclamation. What a lovely face!"

Then he sauntered over to the summer house and spoke to the lady.

To his consternation, she started, gave a quick, gasping sob, and fainted.

It was not a very long insensibility, and under Fred's prompt treatment the large eyes opened, and she whispered:

"Oh, I am so sorry to trouble you! I have been very ill and you startled me."

"I was very much to blame," he said penitently, and I hope you will pardon me. Are you well enough now for me to run up to the house for a glass of wine?"

"I am well enough, but I do not need it;" and she sat up again, and took up a piece of needle-work that had dropped from her hands. Her fingers still trembled, and a pretty flush came a moment into her pale face as she said:

"Are you one of the physicians here?"

"Only by courtesy," he replied. "I have the run of the place; but Dr. Atkinson is the physician. Old Dr. Hare is the head doctor, but he does very little."

"Yes, I know. It is a lovely place, is it not? Out here, I mean. Inside," and she shuddered, "the sounds are often dreadful. But the doctor at home said a change of air would be good for me, and so mamma sent me here."

"Change of air!" thought Fred. "Poor little thing! Quite unconscious of her infirmity."

And he chatted away with her, discussing the weather, the beauty of the grounds, the songs of the birds in the trees around them, and so gradually drifting to books, to comparisons of opinion and criticism. And all through a delightful hour, Fred vainly tried to [illegible] the one point upon which the [illegible] was broken.

[illegible] vacancy in the soft brown eyes that met his own, full of intelligence.

They were still conversing when one of the nurses came down the path leading to the summer-house.

"Miss Bessie," she said, "Dr. Atkinson sent me to say you had better lie down for an hour or two, and he has sent some medicine to your room. Let me help you."

Dr. Read, being a physician, made no attempt to detain the fair patient, noting with sincere sympathy how weak she was and how wearily she leaned upon the nurse's strong arm.

He did not feel inclined to have any jesting about his interest, such as his friend was wont to indulge in when ladies were the subject, so he said nothing of his experience, and joined Dr. Atkinson in his "rounds" without hinting at any desire to see one especial patient—a desire not gratified, for there were only familiar faces in the wards.

But the summer-house was soon found to be Miss Bessie's resort. It was in a secluded part of the grounds, shaded by a thick clump of trees, and provided with a rustic table and a cozy nest for herself, and the place looked homelike with her work-basket, her books, knitting or sketch book, her cushions and footstool.

She never classed herself with her companions, Fred noticed, often speaking pityingly of those more heavily afflicted. But this phase of mental delusion was very common.

But Fred had not, when July closed, found out the delusion of the sweet little girl he called "Miss Bessie." She had gained perfect health in the two months of quiet and open air; but while her eyes had lost their weary expression, they never stared or wandered, but were always steadily tranquil, or lighted only by the animation natural to interesting conversation.

In these two months Fred had scarcely seen Dr. Atkinson. His superior in office, Dr. Hare, had gone away for a summer vacation, and a new wing was being added to the building. With the entire care of the house and the patients, the direction of the workmen, the work of selecting furniture, carpets and other necessaries for the new building, the resident physician had scarcely a moment to call his own, and Fred frequently did not see him at all during his visit.

It was in July that Dr. Read suddenly awoke to the appalling conviction that he was deeply in love with the inmate of a lunatic asylum.

He had deluded himself with a thought that it was pity, professional interest, even curiosity, that drew him again and again to the summer house, where he was sure to meet a warm, if shy welcome, and where the hours flew by in utter content.

But so simple a matter as the reading of a poem had opened his eyes to the truth.

It had become quite a common thing for him to read scraps of newspaper intelligence, little bits from one of the books on the table, or a selection from a favorite work he brought with him, while Bessie sewed or knitted and listened to him.

And on this particular July day he had read a little love poem nestled in the corner of a newspaper. It was not a wonderful production of genius, but it was pretty and tender.

Looking up Fred saw a pair of blushing cheeks, downcast eyes, trembling fingers, and his heart stood still.

He read the truth in a flash. He loved the lovely girl before him, and she—alas! she returned his love.

His first feeling was of keen self-reproach. What if he had added to the mental infirmity that had caused this beautiful young creature to be sent to an asylum?

Would she forget him, or—dreadful possibility!—would the whole reason give way if he deserted her?

He scarcely knew how he reached his home; but once there he sat down and looked the situation squarely in the face.

His own share of the affliction he put aside for the present.

He was a man and he could bear his troubles manfully. That he loved, where his love must die, was in a great measure his own fault and folly; but that he had won a pure, sweet heart, only to wound it, caused him a bitter pain and regret.

Long meditation brought him to one resolution: He must see Dr. Atkinson, make a clear confession, and have his opinion of the danger to be anticipated.

"He knows where the weakness I have failed to discover lies," Fred thought, "and he can tell me whether it is safest to break off my visits suddenly or gradually."

It was not an easy matter to catch Dr. Atkinson, or, having caught him, to secure his attention, but something in Fred's troubled face aroused his friend's anxiety, and he turned his back for the time upon his manifold duties and shut himself in his private office with Fred.

At first he listened gravely enough, but as Fred proceeded his face became more and more amused, until, to the consternation of the penitent speaker, he threw himself back in his chair and broke into a roar of laughter.

"Oh," Fred said, "It is funny, is it? I do not see it in that light. Even if this poor girl is insane——"

"Stop!" interrupted his friend; "don't get angry, my dear fellow. You really love her, you say?"

But Fred was too angry to answer.

"And she loves you—at least you think so—and you want to know if it is a curable case, and——Well I will not torment you any more. Your charmer, Fred, is not a patient, nor, as far as I know, a lunatic."

Fred gave a long sigh, but only looked his eager questions.

"She is my sister, Bessie Atkinson, has had a long winter of illness from typhoid fever, and is paying me a visit. I thought she was quite safe from [illegible] away from there, and I did not think of you. But since you have been prowling around so long, perhaps you had better come now and be introduced in form."

"One moment, Will. I have been a puppy, it seems, in taking her love for granted; but if I have won it?"

"I am her eldest brother, and her father died years ago. I am quite sure that what I approve my mother will sanction, and you must know nothing could please me better than to know Bessie has a lover I esteem so highly as I do you!"

"And—you will not tell her—will you, my awful mistake!"

"I can't promise. I'll try to keep the secret, but," and the doctor roared again, "the idea of Bess as a raging lunatic! Well, there, I won't tell her at all events, until you have told something far more interesting."

And he kept his word so loyally that Bessie Atkinson had been Bessie Read more than a year before she knew that her husband had ever considered her an interesting patient in a lunatic asylum.

Wide Awake. New Volume T. Ill. Boston; D. Lothrop & Co. Price $1.75. This volume includes the six numbers of Wide Awake from December, 1884, to May, 1885, inclusive. The best critics of juvenile literture long ago gave the palm to Wide Awake as the best magazine for young folks published either in this country or in Europe, and it has gone on, year after year, constantly increasing in literary and artistic worth, although in reading one number it has been difficult to see how the next could impove upon it. The publishers ha e spared neither money nor pains to make it what it is. The best authors of the country have been drawn upon as contributors, and nearly every article in its pages has been illustrated by artists of the highest standing and reputation. The present volume contains as special features Charles Egbert Craddock's famous story, "Down the Ravine," and the not less interesting serials, "The Bubbling Teapot," by Lizzie W. Champney, and "In Leisler's Times," by Elbridge S. Brooks. There are besides, stories by Rose Terry Cooke, Susan Coolidge, Mary Hartwell Catherwood, Margaret Sidney, Mary E. Wilkins, Mrs. Jessie Benton Fremont, and others of high reputation, with poems by Celia Thaxter, Dora Read Goodale, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates, "M. E. B.," Louise Imogen Guiney, Mrs. Diaz and others. Most of these are exquisitely illustrated, and the bound volume forms an attractive and valuable present to the young reader.

A Coffee Drunkard.

"What a bright-eyed man," said a Philadelphia Press reporter who leaned against the cashier's desk of a restaurant near the public buildings one day last week. The man in question had just paid a 10 cent check and slipped out of the door with a jerky movement and a swinging of the cane he carried which decidedly endangered the people's peace.

"Bright-eyed? Yes," said the cashier; "he's a coffee drunkard."

"What's a coffee drunkard?"

"A man who comes in here four times in two hours, as that man has this morning and does every morning, and takes a half-pint of coffee every time, is a coffee drunkard. Bright eyes! Well I should say so. That man's condition all the time is the same as that of a man who is getting over a big 'batter.' I mean his nerves are up in 'G,' his muscles are all a quiver, and his mental vision abnormally clear. He is living at a 2:08¾ rate."

"Why does he do it?"

"Has to. Must have a brace. Used to drink rum. Had to quit that, and now does worse. He never sleeps, he tells me."

"Do you know many such?"

"At least half a dozen."

The New Moon for October is on our table. The editor seems to despise what he calls "slouchy proof-reading;" and certainly the pages of the bright little magazine before us are a good specimen of the printer's art. It is published by a company possessed of abundant capital and energy, and the business of the concern is conducted by men who know how to push things." Good short stories, interesting selections, and bright editorials make up this number, and the whole get-up of the magazine seems to be faultless. We feel that we are conferring upon our readers a real benefit by advising them to subscribe for this periodical, the subscription price of which is only $1.00 a year. The moral tone is exceptionally pure, and the editor boasts that not a dull line is allowed admission to its pages. It is published by The New Moon Publishing Co., Lowell, Mass.

A POPULAR FALLACY.

Many people think that Rheumatism cannot be cured. It is caused by a bad state of the blood which deposits poisonous matter in the joints and muscles causing lameness, stiffness and swelling of the joints and excruciating pains Kidney-Wort will certainly effect a cure. It acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, stimulating them to a healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood and eliminates the poison from the system. Go to the nearest druggist, buy Kidney-Wort and be cured.

Horned toads are shipped in great quantities from San Francisco to China, where they are soaked in whisky and sold as medicine.

HIS IGNORANCE COST ME $150.00!

I was sick abed for three months. The doctor said I had Prolapsis Uteri, which was untrue. He didn't try to cure me but wanted to make a $1.50 every day. My uncle is a druggist, and he told me to turn the doctor off and try Sulphur Bitters. I did so and five dollars worth of Sulphur Bitters cured me of general weakness and debility.—Mrs. S.——, New Haven.

"Josh Billings" Dead.

The American who was determined to be the worst speller in the United States, and generally succeeded, has written his last joke. Henry W. Shaw, known the world over as "Josh Billings," died last Wednesday at the Hotel Delmonte in Monterey, California, of apop exy. Death came to him very suddenly. He experinced a severe pain in the chest, and, while he was talking with the physician who had been summoned, he fell back unconscious, and in three minutes was dead. His wife was with him. Mr. Shaw was to have lectured in Monterey Thursday evening for the bene fit of a Good Templars lodge.

Henry W. Shaw was born in Lanesborough, Berkshire county, Massachusetts, in 1818. He went to school until he was fourteen. He then entered Hamilton college, but at the end of one year had enough of college life, and departed for the West where he spent nearly all of the next twenty-five years of his life. He moved about from state to state. According to a friend's yarn, "he first opened a country store, continuing in the business a year or two. He next took a farm on credit, and was obliged, at the end of the third season, to give up this occupation because of a lack of funds. Then he hired himself out to drive cattle. Later, having obtained the place of master of a small boat on the Ohio, he navigated the river for two years, and during that time sunk three boats, and according to his calculation, lost from eight to ten thousand dollars, but, as he had no money to start with, no one ever understood his statement. Next he tried teaching, but didn't succeed very well."

In the course of his wanderings "Josh" found himself in California in 1849, but he did not stay on the Pacific coast very long. He married at the age of twenty-seven, when on a visit to his father in Massachusetts. When forty years old he moved east, in order to educate his two daughters. He found good schools at Poughkeepsie, this state, and settled there in 1858. As he had no regular profession, he took up the business of auctioneer and real estate dealer. His powers as a humorist gave him great success as an auctioneer, but, as the city was then small, his income was not large. One day the editor of a Poughkeepsie daily told him that the man who could talk as well as he could ought to be able to write well, and asked him to contribute something to his paper. Mr. Shaw told him that he had never written a line for publication in his life, but the suggestion pleased him, and he wrote in 1863 a series of between twenty and thirty of the short pieces which have made his name a household word in America since then. For six months he sent in his contributions every week, but no one outside of Poughkeepsie noticed them. One day Mr. Shaw read one of the essays of Artemus Ward on a subject that he had treated in one of his short essays. He read it many times; and the more he read it the less he understood why Artemus Ward's writings should be popular and his pieces had fallen stillborn from the press. He made up his mind that it was the bad spelling and nothing else that had given wings to Artemus Ward's humor and made him famous. So he took his essay on the mule. "The mule's a favorite animal with me," "Josh" once said: "he has treated me pretty rough and I've treated him pretty rough; we understand each other,"—and without changing a word he "slewed around the spelling," as he expressed it, and sent it to the New York Era, a weekly paper. Before mailing it he signed it "Josh Billings." "Josh" was in honor of an old comrade—one "Josh" Carew—of his Western life; "Billings came by inspiration as it were." His Poughkeepsie pieces were anonymous. The misspelled "Essay on the mule" was printed and instantly "went the rounds of the press," and the name of "Josh Billings" became famous before he had written a single essay excepting those he had printed in the Poughkeepsie paper. He simply translated them into his peculiar phonetic system of spelling.

From this time his fame was established. His first book, "Saying of Josh Billings," was issued in 1866, and was followed by "Josh Billings on ice." Both were very successful. In 1870 he printed "Josh Billing's Farmers' Allminax." Its sale was about one hundred thousand a year, and it netted the humorist thirty thousand dollars during the ten years it was issued. While he was employed to write exclusively for the New York Weekly, he received four thousand dollars a year from that journal. "Josh" had been for twenty-four years a familiar figure on the platform, and his good luck attended him there after he had met with failures enough to have disheartened a man less sunny and hopeful than Henry W. Shaw. Mr. Shaw was of striking personal appearance. His hair was long and iron gray, and his beard was short and white, while his moustache was long and formidable. He added to the picturesquness of his face by wearing a high slouch hat.—[Syracuse Herald.

HIS LOSS WAS HER GAIN.

"Well, madam," said a fashionable physian to a wealthy lady patient, "if you don't like my prescriptions, perhaps you had better try Parker's Tonic, or some other quack stuff." "You don't mean it Doctor," she answered, "but your advice may be good for all that. Sometimes what you call "quack stuff" is the best and most scientific medicine, after all." She got a bottle of Parker's Tonic and it cured her of neuralgia arising from disordered stomach and nerves. She told her friends, and now they all keep a doctor at home in the form of Parker's Tonic. 21w5

COLLECTOR POUCHER thus far in his appointments, has overlooked Volney Democrats. The only thing that we can see for them to do is to content themselves with the old saying that "good things come slow." His last appointment was that of James Farrell of Scriba, as inspector of customs.

HANLAN and Lee defeated Courtney and Conley last Thursday in the double scull race at Pleasure Island, near Albany, by three lengths and nine and one-half seconds. Courtney's friends claim that Conley was a weight in the boat. The Courtney stock of excuses are inexhaustible.

AT the Democratic state senatorial convention held at Pulaski last Saturday on motion of James A. Clark, G. W. Bradner of Mexico was nominated by acclamation for state senator. Mr. Bradner is well known throughout the county as an able lawyer in good standing.

THE managers of the Republican campaign are losing no time in strengthening the chances for the success of their candidates. They have secured the consent of that great statesman, Senator Wm. M. Evarts, to make two speeches for Davenport and Carr. He will address the people of Syracuse at the Weiting Opera House to-night. Last night he spoke in Buffalo. Gov. Foraker has also promised to stump the State for the Republican candidates. Their subjects for discussion are not as inspiring as they might be.

IT is said that the question of foreign immigration will be considered at the coming session of Congress in a much broader aspect than ever before. It is thought by many that the time has come for enlarging the qualifications for admission to citizenship, and otherwise guarding the country against the evils of a too large infusion of the foreign element in our voting population. The question is a very delicate one to handle and demands the thought and care of our wisest and best statesmen.—[New York Observer.

THE Buffalo Commercial owned by that shrewd Republican politician, James D. Warren, has the following which we believe sizes the thing up candidly: "The best we can hope for is a united party vote. But the Democrats will be united and solidly against us, and the anti-Cleveland element will be enthusiastic for the Hill ticket. Admitting, therefore, that Davenport will win back the entire Republican vote that bolted last fall, the fight will be a square one between the two parties, with the chances about even. We may as well look the fact in the face. If the Republican ticket is successful this year, it will be the result of hard and systematic work. There is no time to be lost. Let the work of organization be begun at once."

FIRST DISTRICT REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Hon. Henry C. Howe Renominated For Member of Assembly.

The first assembly republican district convention assembled at St. James hall in Oswego at noon Saturday and was called to order by John T. Mott, chairman of the district committee, and on whose motion H. D. Wilcox was elected temporary chairman. Mr. Wilcox read the call of the convention. Dr. Acker of Hannibal and Benton C. Barnes of Oswego were elected temporary secretaries. Mr. Doolittle suggested that the officers take the oath of office and they subscribed to the oath of office. Mr. Nutting moved that the New York assembly rules govern this convention. Adopted. The delegates produced their credentials. The roll was then called.

On motion the temporary organization was made permanent. Mr. Nutting presented the name of Hon. Henry C. Howe as a candidate for renomination with a few general remarks. On closing he suggested that the friends of the candidates, if there be other candidates, present their names. Mr. Hirschboltz seconded the nomination of Mr. Howe, Mr. H. Owlett nominated Hon. D. C. Littlejohn. Mr. Jones moved that a committee of one from each ward and town constitute a conference committee to name a candidate for member. After various motions and amendments a motion finally prevailed that each delegate rise in his place as his name was called and name his choice. On calling the roll Henry C. Howe received sixty-seven votes and Dewitt C. Littlejohn received seven votes. On motion Mr. Howe was made the unanimous nominee of the convention. He thanked the convention for the nomination. W. J. Burt, was added to assembly district committee.

FIRST DISTRICT DEMOCRATS.

The Democratic Convention Reassembles—Willard Johnson Nominated for the Assembly.

The first assembly district convention met in St. James hall at 2:30 to day and was called to order by Melvin F. Stephens.

After the roll had been called the chairman stated that the chief object of the convention was to nominate a candidate for member of assembly.

Mr. W. J. Boggs of the First ward arose and said that never in the history of the Democratic party had there been so good a chance to elect a Democratic member of assembly. He then presented the name of Frank M. Baker, a man who would be the tool of no corporate body.

Mr. W. J. Garrahan moved the nomination of F. M. Baker by acclamation.

Mr. Maukin withdrew Mr. Baker's name.

Mr. W. C. Stephens of Volney moved to proceed to an informal ballot for member of assembly.

Mr. J. B. Higgins thought it premature to move the nomination of any one candidate till the others had been presented.

Mr. Stephens withdrew his motion.

Mr. Higgins moved that Willard Johnson of Volney be the nominee.

Mr. Boggs then withdrew Mr. Baker's name.

Mr. Higgins again presented Mr. Johnson's name.

Mr. Higgins said "It behooves the Democratic party of this district to put forward its strongest man; one in whom not only the Democratic party of the district have confidence but in whom the business men believe." Looking over Mr. Johnson's record, his ability and character, he considered him by all means the strongest candidate that could be put forth. He had never been known to betray a friend or betray a trust, but he had faithfully fulfilled every trust. Grave and serious questions are coming before the people of this city which require the best material; we can furnish. We want a man who can meet these questions. He had heard assurances from Republicans that if a good man was nominated he would be elected. Mr. Johnson would fulfill all the requirements. He ought to command the votes of every Democrat in the district and he will receive them. The acquisitions which he will receive from the Republican party will insure his election. Above all other candidates Willard Johnson is the man if we hope for success.

R. Scully moved that the roll be called and each delegate name his choice.

Mr. P. Cusick moved that Mr. Johnson's nomination be made by acclamation. Carried.

President Lincoln went to the theatre often to forget his cares. Grant not so frequently. Hayes seldom. Arthur went every time there was anything worth seeing. He was very hospitable to actors and actresses too. President Cleveland does not care very much for the theatre, but he goes occasionally.

The Republicans of New York must not think that their friends in Ohio have carried the election in this state, too. If New York is carried by the Republicans, it means earnest work in every hamlet. Remember that the friends in Ohio and all throughout the union are looking for encouragement from the Empire state.—[Watertown Times, (Rep.)

It is said that Arthur had an insurance policy for $10,000 on entering the office of Vice-President, and that after becoming President he obtained another for same amount. Five thousand dollars were lost on Lincoln and twelve on Garfield. Cleveland had policies for $16,000, all issued before his election, and a month ago application was made for $10,000 more. This will be granted at ordinary rates.

STATE AND VICINITY.

Col. T. B. White and Geo. N. Burt have entered into a law partnership with offices in Oswego.

The engine and three cars of the train from Oswego that is due in Syracuse at 3:20 p. m., was thrown off the track Saturday near the junction of the D., L. & W. and Auburn R. R. by a misplaced switch.

Frank A. Pike, a printer on the Auburn Dispatch, has just fallen heir to $25,000 from an aunt at Glen Falls. Six months ago he was left $75,000 by the death of his grandmother. He is unable to touch either sum until he becomes of age.

Mr. James Jones whose cheese box factory two miles east of Gilbert's Mills was burned a few nights since, is preparing to rebuild, and expects to have his new factory in operation before winter.—[Phœnix Register.

The case of Father O'Connell of Oswego will be resumed at Albany to-day. The findings of the court, with the evidence in full, will immediately be placed in the hands of the Bishop. It is probable that judgment will be entered up within the present month. The case has been delayed by the absence of the Bishop in Virginia.

Soon after the imprisonment of James D. Fish, partner of Grant & Ward, in Auburn prison, a woman who lay dying in a New York hospital made a statement that she had been secretly married to Mr. Fish, and that her young baby was his child. This was not believed at first, but Fish's twenty-three-year-old daughter determined to honestly investigate, and paid a visit to her father in Auburn for that purpose, resulting in discovery that the woman told the truth. Miss Fish immediately claimed the babe, the mother having died. Recently Miss Fish engaged board with the family of D. Noyhart in East Genesee street, Auburn, for herself and the babe, and their arrival is momentarily expected. The babe is now seven months old and Miss Fish has assumed entire control of it and will bring it to Auburn. She moves to be near her father.

FROM DEATH'S DOOR.

M. M. Devereaux of Iona, Mich., was a sight to behold. He says: "I had no action of the Kidneys and suffered terribly. My legs were as big as my body and my body as big as a barrel. The best doctors gave me up. Finally I tried Kidney-Wort. In four or five days a change came, in eight or ten days I was on my feet, and now I am completely cured. It was certainly a miracle." All druggists keep Kidney-Wort which is put up both in liquid and dry form.

HOW IT WAS!

At the battle of Gettysburg I was shot through the left leg and was sent to the hospital. The army surgeons relieved me but pronounced my case incurable. TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Owing to the filthy condition of many premises in our village, the Board of Health urgently request all owners or occupants of houses, whose privies, outhouses and vaults have not been cleaned out and renovated, that they do the same at once and put their premises in good, wholesome, sanitary condition while the weather permits, remembering that while we are benefitting ourselves, we are conferring a great favor upon the public.

I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Cheese Market.

(FROM THE UTICA HERALD.)

AT UTICA Oct. 19.

There has been a great drop in cheese to-day; that is to say in the amount sold, but not much drop in the price. The fancies could not obtain as much as they did last week, and the result was that several of them concluded not to sell, but to wait over for another week. Some of the factories on the other hand, closed out all of their September cheese to-day, but on an average the September make is only sold down to the 25th. The severe illness of David H. Burrell of Little Falls, prevented his buyer from taking any but his regular factories and practically withdrew his competition from the market. Trade therefore was very dull, and down to half past five o'clock nobody knew whether there would be any prices or not. Buyers, however are too much interested to allow the market to react much at present, but they were quite willing to see the factorymen hold over. Transactions for the day are as follows: 48 lots, 4,597 boxes, at 9⅞c.; 7 lots, 690 boxes, at 10⅛c.; 7 lots, 680 boxes, at 10¼c.; 120 boxes at 10⅜c.; 11 lots, 1,116 boxes, at 10¼c.; and 100 boxes at 10⅝c. Sales 7,303 boxes; consignments 531 boxes; total 7,834 boxes. Ruling price 9⅞c. One year ago the marketings were 7,921 boxes, with 11⅝c. for ruling; two years ago they were 10,-839, ruling 11¼c.

LITTLE FALLS, Oct. 19.

CHEESE.—This market has ruled firm to-day for all classes of goods. Fine stock was in strong demand and could readily secure 10¼c. But salesmen were quite indifferent about selling at this rate and quite a number named 10⅜c. for their cheese and left without selling. Sales are only about half what they were last week, one cause of the light sale being the absence from the market of one of the heaviest buyers. Colored cheese was in rather better demand than white. Salesmen are quite confident that prices for fine September cheese will not go lower and they have strong hopes of an improvement. Buyers were not very anxious to make purchases and some advised holding over the week. Sales are:

Lots.	Boxes.	Prices
49	3,417	10 cts
21	1,367	10¼cts
70	4,748
Farm Dairy	1,146
Total	5 930

FARM DAIRIES.—The morning market shows sales of 1,146 boxes of cheese at 9¼@10¾c.; the bulk going at 10c. Only one lot sold at 10¾c. and one at 10¼c.

BUTTER.—Fifty-four packages of farm dairy butter sold at 20@21c., the bulk at 20c. Thirty-five creamery brought 23c.

AT FULTON.

The offerings compared favorably with last week. Most of the cheese was sold at 9⅞, ruling.

A FIERY MONSTER.

It Measures Fifty Feet Across and Excites the Fears of the Superstitious.

PITTSBURG, Pa.—The aerolite or meteoric stone which caused the loud detonation heard throughout the greater part of Washington and Alleghany counties on Saturday, fell upon the farm of Mr. Buckland, in Jefferson township, Washington county, near the West Virginia line. Ellis Jones, a mail carrier, witnessed the fiery ball in its flight through the heavens. He said he never beheld a more awful or impressive sight. His horse suddenly stopped and he heard a noise as if the winds were rushing onward with great violence. Looking up he saw moving high above him a huge mass, which he described as resembling a great coal of fire as large as the largest barn he ever saw. There appeared to be attached to it an immense flame of deep red flame of a deep red color which tapered off into a darker tail. Instantly the noise which accompanied it ceased; the fire like appearance, the flame and tail disappeared, and in their stead the stone assumed a whitish hue, which it retained until it passed out or sight. Jones' horse was so frightened that it took several minutes of vigorous application of the whip before the animal could be persuaded to move.

When the stone fell it broke in three pieces, but did not penetrate the earth to such a great depth as already stated, as two thirds of it remained above ground. It is grayish in color, with a succession of red streaks; is irregular in form and at least fifty feet in diameter. Consternation seized upon the people who beheld the metor in its flight, and many of them are filled with a superstitious dread, believing that the spirit which causes pestilence and famine pervaded the fiery visitor. A great number of people have gone to see the wonder. Up to this time the relic hunters have done remarkably well in carrying away souvenirs.

An Ohio Statesman Who Feared His Economical Constituents.

One day big, handsome Ben Le Fevre was laying his rotund and jovial personality in a marble bath-tub in the House bath-rooms at the Capitol.

While he was disporting himself in topid water, made foaming with scented soap, and was about ready to be rubbed dry by the attendant, a messenger came down and called to him from the outside that there were some gentlemen above anxious to see him on important business for a moment, as they were obliged to depart hurriedly to catch a train.

"Who are they?" called the General, as he blew the water out of his big mustache with a snort like a porpoise.

"They are some gentlemen from Ohio, sir," was the response.

"Are they people from my district?" asked Ben.

"Yes, sir," answered the messenger.

"Then, for heaven's sake don't send them down here. Shut the doors there, and keeps them out. Good Lord! if any of them find I bathe in a marble tub and am rubbed down by a nigger, instead of going down to the creek, and drying myself with my shirt, it will lose me a thousand votes."

The unterrified and unwashed constituents didn't get in.—[Washington Letter.

The English government has presented a note to the Spanish government, demanding reparation for an insult to the British consulate at Havana. The consulate became surety for a Spanish claim against a merchant, and pending an appeal the merchant failed, whereupon the Spanish officials siezed and sold the archives of the consulate, in spite of the protest of the consul.

Old weather prophets say: "When it freezes and snows in October, January will bring warm weather, but if it is thundering and heat lightning, the winter will resemble April in temperature. L. B. Babcock, of Fulton, made us a short call yesterday. A simple device for admitting a small amount of fresh air through a window without danger of draught is coming into general use. It consists in allowing an extra depth of bead to the sill of a window, so that the lower sash can be raised for an inch or two without causing an opening at the bottom, the air finding entrance only between the meeting rails.

Ten thousand barrels of apples shipped from New York, recently, were sold in Liverpool, England, October 5th. King apples from Tompkins county, this State, brought sixteen shillings a barrel; Baldwins, fourteen shillings, and Greenings, twelve shillings. The expense of putting the apples on the English market, including everything from the picking of the fruit to their delivery in Liverpool, average six shillings for the Kings, five shillings for Baldwins and four shillings for Greenings.

The Postmaster General has placed upon the fraud list of the postoffice department an eastern manufacturing company who have adopted a novel plan to swindle the public. The company advertised to furnish a corn sheller for $4.50 and a knife sharpener for $5. Several responded to the liberal offer, which was much below the price charged for such implements. The corn sheller consisted of a simple piece of iron which would be dear at one dollar per thousand, and the knife sharpener was a slight covering of emory paper on a small piece of wood, which could be readily purchased at fifty cents per thousand. The advertisements were so alluring that a great number of farmers in the eastern states were victimized before the swindle was exposed. Steps have been taken by the department to break it up.

An Orwell correspondent to the Pulask Democrat says: "The silver wedding of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Thompson last week Wednesday, was a very pleasant occasion. The presents were very fine consisting of castor, cake basket, napkin rings, fruit dish, tea knives, nut crackers, and an exquisitely beautiful water pitcher in rustic hangings; also a very quaint old cabin basket and four silver dollars. The bride and groom are more than pleased; they are overjoyed. The Rev. Mr. Mattoon performed the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. R. R. McCully, of Fulton acting as right and left supporters. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson return their thanks to their friends and will expect them at their golden wedding, October 7th, 1910.

Marrying in Haste.

A very young girl is certainly not capable of choosing a husband. She takes it for granted that men are always as she sees them in society, polite, friendly, and on their good behaviour. If she marries early in life the man who happens to please her fancy, she learns to her sorrow that in nine cases out of ten a man at home and a man in society are widely different beings. Five years at that period of life produce a great change in opinions and feelings. We frequently come to detest at twenty-five what we admired at sixteen. We advance from the taffy candy and peanut age to the era of gum-drops and marron glances, and even in later years to lose our yearnings for those dainties. Similar changes take place in the moral and spiritual nature. Why should we feel the same toward persons in after life, when we have learned to distinguish between the false and the true, the bad and good, any more than we should like dime novels after we have become acquainted with Dickens, Thackery and Shakespeare? How few comparatively of the school girl friendships extend into later life. How few of our companions in society do we love as well after twenty years have passed. How few even of our own brothers and sisters, in whom we do not see faults we could wish eradicated. Considering all this, how is it possible for one to feel surprise when a couple who marry in their teens grow to love each other less as years roll by? When both grow alike, whether it be rapidly or slowly, backward or forward, there is some hope of their ever seeing each other with the same eyes; but when one progresses and the other retrogrades, a difference springs up between them, and in time one looks down upon the other with a feeling of superiority, perhaps unconfessed, but still there; while the other, unable to perceive the real cause of the trouble, grows at length to dislike what was once loved. And thus it happens that those who loved at sixteen are indifferent at twenty-five, and sometimes divorced at thirty. One great cause of early marriages is the pernicious habit of calling a girl who remains unmarried until twenty-five "an old maid." This is done by many well-meaning but thoughtless persons, who would be sorry to think that any act or expression of theirs had ever caused one an hour of misery; yet this very dread of being called an "old maid" has driven more women into marriage and life-long misery than any other thing, excepting perhaps poverty. It is a mistake to think that single life is any less noble than marriage, especially if the spirit of discord is permitted to inflict its horrors upon a whole household.

A Forgiving Husband.

Edward Ames of Mexico, Oswego county, called upon Acting Chief Grant at Oswego, Thursday and asked him to lend his assistance in finding his recreant wife, who left her home on the 8th inst., and whom he learned was living in a brothel in Oswego. Officer Connelly searched several places, and at last found the woman. She was taken to police headquarters, where, at the sight of her husband, she broke down and wept bitterly, asking for forgiveness, which was readily granted by the wronged husband, and, after being read a lecture on the duties of a wife by Acting Chief Grant, the couple departed as loving as two turtle doves. Mrs. Ames is a young woman, not yet 23, and quite good looking, while her husband is 53 years of age.

The October Century.

It contains an illustrated article entitled "Riverside Park." The resting place of General Grant, is the subject of a paper by Wm. A. Styles and fully illustrated. The concluding paper on the explosions in Alaska, is from the pen of Lieutenant Schwatka. George M. Grant contributes an article on "The Canadian Pacific Railway." "Independent Journalism" is ably treated by G. S. Merriam. A number of pages are devoted to interesting articles and illustrations relating to the life and services of General Grant. Two poems also relate to the dead hero. The October Century is fully up to the high standard it has already reached.

St. Nicholas For October.

This is the latest number of the volume, and it contains some of the best and brightest contributions of the whole year. "Peggy's Garden," by Celia Thaxter is peculiarly bright and spicy. Other papers are: "Honey Hunters," "His Own Fault," "How Science won the Game" and "Driven Back to Eden." The young people nowhere else find so interesting, useful and fascinating a magazine as St. Nicholas.

The English language consists of about 80,000 words, yet when a man is pulling on a tight boot or waiting for his wife to dress for church he nearly always invents a few extra words to express his feelings.

The Carpenter Trial.

The trial of Warren E. Carpenter, charged with the murder of his wife at Sandy Creek, on the night of December 1 1884, was begun at Oswego before Judge Vann last Wednesday. Carpenter was brought into court attended by his daughter. Prisoner was perfectly cool. He expressed himself to one gentleman as very much afraid that a sailor would get on the jury. He was thus particular because the brother of Mrs. Carpenter a sea captain, has been instrumental in procuring the indictment against him, and he said that if any sailors got on the jury they might be against him. District Attorney Mead and Assistant District Attorney Stranahan appeared for the people and D. E. Ainsworth, Merrick Stowell and ex-Attorney General Leslie W. Russell for the defense. The twelfth juror was obtained yesterday morning. The following are the jurors:

William McCarthy, a farmer of Palermo; George Haselton, a mechanic of Schrœppel; Benjamin Pickens, a farmer of Schrœpple; Samuel S. Palmer, a farmer of Hannibal; Charles Tompkins, a farmer of Hannibal; James P. Jacobs, a farmer of New Haven; Reuben Sheldon, a farmer of Schrœppel; William Howell, a farmer of Oswego Town; John Sleight, a painter of Oswego; Albert Lane. a farmer of Hannibal; Robert Anderson, a farmer of Oswego Town.

Assistant District Attorney Stranahan opened the case for the people in an able speech of half an hour's length, giving a thorough revision of the prisoners connection with the supposed crime.

A. J. Hopkins, architect, Oswego, was the first witness called upon the stand for the people.

Railroad Accident.

JERSEY CITY, Oct. 18.—The emigrant train which left Jersey City at 7:50 o'clock to-night, stopped at a coal shute and at the east side of Hackensack river bridge, when the Western express, leaving here at 8:15 o'clock, crushed into the caboose of the emigrant train and threw the caboose and a passenger car upon the east-bound track, also wrecking two other cars. Shortly after Lehigh Valley train No. 3, leaving Newark at 8:10 o'clock, crashed into the wreck and one of the Lehigh Valley cars took fire. The wreck is one of the most frightful that has occurred on the road for years. Information of the accident was telegraphed to this city and several physicians were summoned and sent to the wreck. The bodies of two women and a man were recovered. One of the women was decapitated. Their names could not be ascertained. The body of a boy about 12 years was also found in the wreck with both legs cut off. All the killed and wounded except one were in the emigrant train.

The accident occurred on the meadows in a desolate place not near any habitation. A dense fog prevailed at the time.

Former Mexico Pastor.

A dispatch from Springfield, Mass., says: Rev. C. M. Booth, a Baptist Evangelist and formerly pastor of a church at Mexico, N. Y., has been suspended from membership of State street church in this city and will doubtless be expelled, at a meeting of the church Thursday evening. He has confessed that the letter on which he was received into the Springfield church from the one in Mexico, N. Y., was forged by him and that he also forged in August last the names of several Plainfield, Mass., men by appending them to a paper certifying to the good character of a woman with whom he had associated, who had previously confessed to him that she was a prostitute. This paper was circulated at Mexico in an attempt to bolster up his character. The names were copied from autographs which were signed to a letter thanking him for his labor as a revivalist at Plainfield last winter. He has been the acting pastor of the Cannington Baptist church for a year.

A Sudden Departure.

A week ago yesterday, Charles Culver one of the caulkers employed on the water works, received a check for about $32.00, being a part of his pay. He came down town and after a little difficulty succeeded in getting it cashed at Dexter's meat market. He was last seen on Second street in the vicinity of the N. Y., O. & W. depot, making inquiries about the trains. Since that time nothing has been heard from him. Mr. Patrick said to a TIMES reporter Monday night that Culver was one of the steadiest men he had, and he could assign no reason for his unceremonious departure. "He worked for me in Adams" said Mr. Patrick in conclusion, "and I always considered him one of my best men. He was the last person I expected would leave so mysteriously. I have heard nothing from him." He was not a drinking man and I can't account for it." It was reported about town that he had left a board bill unpaid, but an inquiry developed the fact that enough money was coming to him when he left to nearly settle that indebtedness. The case is somewhat shrouded in mystery.

The Phœnix Road.

The lease of the Syracuse, Phœnix & Oswego rail-road to the R., W. & O. company expired last Monday. The company has had charge of the road since Sept. 7. The passenger business since that time has been very good and demonstrated beyond a doubt that the road would be a paying one. Monday night bills were circulated about town that all trains would be discontinued after that date. About an hour after the arrival of the bills, a dispatch was received to countermand the bills and that trains would run as usual until further notice.

Arraigned for Robbery.

James Dwyer and Mert Murphy of this village were arraigned Saturday morning in Oswego, on a charge of robbery in the first degree. It will be remembered that the 27th day of last June James Dewell of Palermo was set and robbed in the vicinity of the Willow hotel. He swore out a warrant for Murphy and Dwyer, and at the examination fully identified them. Both pleaded not guilty and gave bail in the sum of $2,000 to await the grand jury.

Teachers' Institute.

School Commissioner Metcalf was in town on Monday making arrangements for the coming teacher's county institute to be held in this village, commencing November 30th, and continuing five days. The institute, it is now believed, will be held in Stephen's opera house, as commodious a building as there is in the county. Fulton can afford the best accommodations for the four or five hundred teachers who are expected to be present.

The three mile walking match last Saturday evening between Carter of Oswego and Landon of this village in the Casino rink in Oswego, for a purse of $10.00 was decided by the judges to be a draw. It was claimed by disinterested parties that the race should have been given to Landon, as Carter was said to have run by him on the last lap. If the race was a fair heel and toe walk, this fact should have decided the race in Landon's favor.

[illegible] sells Smith's genuine [illegible]

[illegible] by the [illegible] a really elegant line of dress goods, artistically arranged with the different buttons and trimmings to match, giving a very good idea of how the goods looked when made up. Under these goods, hanging in graceful festoons, a fine line of the new feather trimmings for cloaks, etc., was shown in all the new and most fashionable shades. Just inside of the Oneida street door was a handsome assortment of raw silk and jute tapestry and curtain draperies. The linen department was very full and complete, all the newest and latest designs in white, Turkey red, etc., were shown very handsomely arranged. On the opposite side of the north store was a bewildering assortment of ladies and children's hosiery in every conceivable color, shade and size. The line of handkerchiefs was large and varied. Upon a table in the center of the store was an elegant and elaborate display of plush goods in all colors with trimmings to match, and also an exhibit of rich dress goods, the names of which the reporter was wholly ignorant of. The line of gents, ladie's and children's underwear was very complete. At the rear of the south store, tastefully draped from the ceiling, were shawls in camel's hair, beaver, Persian, velvet, etc., under which was an elegant line of cloakings with buttons and Astrachan and plush trimmings to match. The display of cloaks in plushes, brocaded silks, mattlasee goods, etc., was very large and attracted much attention. The millinery department simply baffled description; it must be seen to be appreciated, and the crowds in the spacious stores all day and evening certainly indicated that Bacon's efforts were appreciated. Two arches of trimmings for hats and bonnets, that occasioned much comment, were composed entirely of birds of beautiful plumage. While deploring this sacrifice, one could not help but think that the beautiful birds could not have died for a better purpose than to be used for trimming the head gear of the fair sex. A large display of trimmed hats and bonnets was shown. The line of silk handkerchiefs, kid gloves, hand bags, ribbons, fancy goods, etc., can not help but satisfy the most fastidious. On the second floor in the carpet department, was a large assortment of Smyrna and velvet Brussels rugs, hassocks, carpets Ingrain and Brussels, lace curtains, oil-cloths, etc. Those who failed to visit the stores of F. E. Bacon last Thursday missed a grand treat, as his "opening days" are worth a journey of many miles to see.

A Bad Fire.

Sand Bank, a small village in the northern part of this county, suffered a great loss by fire on Tuesday night of last week. About one half of the village was destroyed, Twelve dwellings ten stores, a number of barns, two churches, two hotels and the post-office were totally demolished. The fire originated in the saloon of one W. D. Jones, son of Lewis Jones, a respectable farmand is believed to be incendiary. Jones has been arrested and it is said that he is not the only one suspected. The total loss is about $65,000, with an insurance of about one half that amount. SOUTH SCRIBA Oct. 20.—About two months ago some of the old vetrans thought they ought to start a G. A. R. About twenty-five officers and members of Post O'Brian of Oswego came out to assist and install officers. After the installation of the officers the ladies served a supper at the hall, which is the old store formerly occupied by J. N. Peck. George Sheffield was elected commander. A Story of To-day.

The stories heard at mother's knee are never wholly forgotten. They, form a little spring that never dries up in our journey through scorching years. The little boys of fifteen years ago are the men of to-day, and they used to hear their mothers tell of the purchase of their little "first pants" and "first coat with waist," at Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street. They have never forgotten the fact, nor how nice, warm and comfortable the overcoats were and how like little men they looked with the new "toggery" on. Now, as men, the habit reinforced by good judgment and common sense, they buy at the same place, even better goods. The fall and winter stock of 1885 improves upon all that has gone before and the low cash prices still prevail.

F. E. BACON.

[illegible] timothy with wheat as it [illegible] its growth; wait two weeks [illegible].

A light dusting of salt sown on buckwheat is said to largely increase the yield of grain, making it fill even in dry weather.

The growth of the sunflower for its seed to feed is rapidly increasing in many sections of the country. Sunflower seed is said to be one of the very best poultry feeds.

Now that harvesting is over remove the knives from the mowers and reapers, to avoid accidents, and see that all machinery used is properly oiled and stored in a dry place.

Crushed oats make the best feed for horses. Old horses cannot easily masticate whole grain, and the crushing of the oats consequently adds 25 per cent. to their value.

Salt and cayenne pepper are two ingredients that are both grateful and useful in small quantities—mixed with soft food for poultry. The salt is appetizing, the red pepper tonical and warming to the system. The cayenne may be given in their drink, too, in cold weather, to good advantage.

By mixing one part sulphur to three parts of salt, and feeding to the sheep it will have a tendency to improve the general health and drive away the ticks. Many farmers feed sulphur both summer and winter, with excellent results. Flocks fed in this manner are much less liable to be affected with foot rot.

Milking the Cow.

When I was young and used to roam around over the country, gathering water melons in the dark of the moon, I used to think I could milk anybody's cow, but I do not think so now. I do not milk a cow now unless the sign is right, and it hasn't been right for a good many years.

The last cow I tried to milk was a common cow, born in obscurity; kind of a self made cow. I remember her brow was low, but she wore her tail high and she was haughty, oh, so haughty.

I made a commonplace remark to her, one that is used in the very best of society, one that need not have given offense anywhere. I said "so," and she "soed." Then I told her to "histe," and she "histed." But I thought she overdid it. She put too much expression in it.

Just then I heard something crash through the window of the barn and fall with a dull sickening thud on the outside. The neighbors came to see what it was that caused the noise. They found that I had done it in getting through the window.

I asked the neighbors if the barn was still standing. They said it was. Then I asked if the cow was injured much. They said she seemed to be quite robust. Then I requested them to go in and calm the cow a little and see if they could not get my plug hat off her horns.

I am buying all my milk now of a milkman. I select a gentle milkman who will not kick and I feel as though I could trust him. Then if he feels as though he could trust me, it is all right. —[Bill Nye.

The Cost of Poultry Flesh.

Almost every year the absurd statement goes the rounds through the agricultural press that a pound of poultry flesh is as cheaply grown as a pound of pork, and brings double the price. It is enough to say that if the first half of this statement were true the last would not be. What is cheaply produced can be sold cheaply, and vice versa. Poultry as flesh costs more per pound than any other meat. Hogs make into flesh a larger proportion of what they eat than any other domestic animal. It is this fact that makes their flesh the staple food on more tables in this and many other countries than either poultry, beef or mutton. We do not like to discourage the growing of poultry, but encouraging it by false ideas about its cheapness of production benefits nobody. There is enough to be said in favor of poultry raising in the profit of egg production. This may, and often does, make it possible for the farmer to eat his home-grown poultry at as little expense as his home-grown pork. And most farmers would be better off if they ate poultry until they advanced its price to something like what the flesh by itself has cost them.—[Boston Cultivator.

The Increase of Insanity.

Boston supports 800 insane, says Mr. T. B. Sanborn, not 75 of whom will recover!

This is frightful! Insanity has increased 40 per cent in a decade and most of the cases are incurable. Whatever the individual cause may be, the fact remains that Uric Acid blood sets the brain on fire, destroyes its tissues, and then comes some form of fatal lunacy.

Nothing is so pitiable as a mind diseased. Most brain troubles begin in the stomach; then if the blood is filled with uric acid, caused by failure of kidney action, and the consequent destruction of the blood life—albumen—you have the fuel and the flame and a brain in full blaze as when one raves, or in slow combustion, as in milder forms of insanity. Rev. E. D. Hopkins, of St. Johnsbury, Vt., a few years ago was confined in an asylum. He took a terrible cold while aiding in putting out a fire in a neighbor's burning house, and for twenty-five years that cold was slowly filling his blood with uric acid and finally the deadly work was done. The case looked hopeless but he happily used Warner's safe cure and recovered. That was three years ago [illegible] his blood of all [illegible] acid, he has remained well [illegible]

[illegible] a terrible thing to lose [illegible], but it is a more terrible [illegible] condition when it [illegible]

[illegible] Washington keep large stocks of liquors, from Mumm's extra dry champagne down to a very cheap article of whisky, and you will find wine stores in nearly every block. In no city of the United States, except, perhaps, New Orleans, is there so much wine drank in proportion to the population. Many families never sit down to a meal without having wine on the table, and at a Washington hotel, where public men stop, it is the rule to take a bottle of wine with your dinner. Within the last few years punch has become very popular at Washington, and you will find now a big punch bowl at almost every fashionable gathering. It is quite an art to make a fine Washington punch, and it takes very little of the regular article to cause the knees to quiver and the head to swim. One recipe contains the ingredients, whisky, rum, claret, champagne, sugar and lemons. A little water added to this, and you have a drink that will put an old toper under the table after half of his usual allowance. Still, this stuff is given to young men and maidens.

There is a good deal of difference in the United States as to drinking. Men from the north and east and from California drink wine, while those from the west and south take whisky or beer. Kentuckians usually take whisky straight, and Wisconsins are fond of their own Milwaukee lager. Senators Frye and Blair are said to be the only senators who are teetotalers. Attorney General Garland likes a good article of bourbon. President Cleveland drinks beer sometimes. The speaker is a good judge of liquors, and he often takes a bottle of wine with his lunch.

There was a congressman named Jadwin in the forty-seventh congress who never sat down to a meal without having a tea-cup of hot water placed before him. He seasoned it with cream and sugar, and drank it as other people do coffee. Congressman Hatch of Missouri is also a hot water drinker, and Breckenridge of Arkansas takes it with every meal. These hot water drinkers advocate the practice as a cure for dyspepsia and indigestion, and they say they become as fond of the drink as of tea, coffee, or whisky.—[Washington correspondence.

HOUSEHOLD HELPS.

Lard may be sweetened by boiling slices of potatoes in it.

Stains on cups and saucers may be removed by rubbing with ashes.

To prevent mustard plaster from blistering, mix it with the white of egg.

If the oven is too hot when baking, place a small dish of cold water in it.

The wing of turkeys, geese and chickens is good to wash and clean windows, as it leaves no dust or lint as cloth.

To brighten the inside of a coffee or tea-pot, fill with water, add a small piece of soap, and let it boil about forty-five minutes.

To exterminate bed-bugs, dissolve alum in water and apply to the bedstead with a feather. Be careful not to touch the paint or varnish.

To remove grease from wall paper, lay several folds of blotting paper on the spot, and hold a hot iron near it until the grease is absorbed.

A liquid black lead polish for polishing stoves is made by adding to each pound of black lead one gill of turpentine, one gill of water, and one ounce of sugar.

To keep insects out of bird cages, tie up a little sulphur in a bag and suspend it in the cage. Red ants will never be found in a closet or drawer if a small bag of sulphur be kept constantly in these places.

Rubber is easily jointed and made as strong as an original fabric by softening before a fire and laying the edges carefully together without dust, dirt or moisture between. The edges so joined must be freshly cut in the beginning.

The best cement for a temporary purpose, as for making the corks or stoppers of bottles perfectly air or vapor tight, is red lead or finely powered litharge mixed with undiluted glycerine. This hardens soon enough, and when required can easily be removed.

To make a firm paste, take gum arabic one-half ounce; powdered gum tragacanth, one-half ounce; acetic acid, twenty drops; with one and one-half ounces of water will form a paste by which paper may be pasted to wood or anything else.

Old newspapers will put the finishing touch to newly cleansed silver knives and forks and tinware better than anything else. Rub them well and make perfectly dry. They are excellent to polish stoves that have not been blackened for some length of time.

How Nations Drift Into War.

"Papa, how do nations get into war with each other?" asked Tommy Seasonby.

"Sometimes one way, sometimes another," said the father. "Now, there are Germany and Spain—they came near getting into war because a Spanish mob took down the German flag."

"No, my dear," put in Mrs. Seasonby, "that wasn't the reason."

"But, my darling," said Mr. Seasonby, "Don't you suppose I know? You are mistaken. That was the reason."

"No, dearie, you are mistaken. It was because the Germans—"

"Mrs. Seasonby, I say it was because ——"

"Peleg, you know better. You are only trying to——"

"Madam, I don't understand that your opinion was asked in this matter anyway."

"Well, I don't want my boy instructed by an old ignoramus."

"Besides, you impudent——"

"Put down your cane, you old brute. Don't you dare to bristle up to me, or I'll send this rolling pin at your head, you old——"

"Never mind," interrupted Tommy, "I guess I know how wars begin."—Chicago News.

THE PROPER THING.

Orleans blue is one of the new millinery colors.

Link bracelets are superseding bangles and bands.

Short plastrons with revers are much worn on the newest dresses.

Satin brocades will be as much worn as usual during the coming season.

The bodices of all evening dresses are laced either in the front or back.

Hats with high crowns are as often trimmed on one side as all in front.

Velvet is used upon checked or plaided suits in preference to any other trimmings.

Crinolines are re-appearing in the Paris fashions, and hooped petticoats are the thing.

High collars are often beautified by a fall of lace above which the linen collar appears.

Four-button lengths will be more stylish during the coming season than the mosquetaire gloves.

White skirts are going out of fashion. Black and red skirts are seen but the preference is for black.

A favorite fancy is a small knot of ribbon the color of the dress set on the side of the high, close collar.

New suits of striped goods will generally have under skirts of striped fabrics, either silk or woolen, without trimming.

The prevailing shapes among hats this season are walking hats and turbans, though a few large, wide-brimmed felt hats are seen.

The latest freak in fancy note paper is fiery red, fine and hand made, with envelopes to match. It is called for as "Mahdi" note paper.

The sash polonaise, consisting of a pointed bodice, or closely fitted basque, lengthened in the back by sash-like drapery is very popular.

Pale almond and delicate rose are two colors which are to be exceedingly fashionable in silks and satins for dancing toilets the coming season.

Broad velvet ribbon bands are revived to wear around the neck, decorated with jewelled crescents, stars, hearts and different shaped ornaments.

Laced boots are again coming into favor for the street and for evening wear. Satin and fine kid boots have side lacings as did those of years ago.

Badly Written Names.

Among the trying things an editor, printer or proofreader has to do are the attempts at deciphering and guessing at the hieroglyphically written names in the manuscripts of some correspondents. If there is anything written carelessly and illegibly in a manuscript it is certain to be names. These mistakes are always the kind that make people mad. There is nothing that makes a man feel more like swearing than to go to bed some night rejoicing that his name is Jones or Smith and wake up finding his name so distorted in the morning paper that he can scarcely recognize his identity and tell what manner of man he is. His first impression urges him to blow up the whole press gang. But in the majority of cases the correspondent who writes the name is the one who should take the results.

Somebody's Mother.

The woman was old, and ragged and gray,
And bent with a chill of a winter's day;
The streets were white with a recent snow,
And the woman's feet with age were slow.

At the crowded crossing she waited long,
Jostled aside by the careless throng
Of human beings who passed her by,
Unheeding the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street with laughter and shout,
Glad in the freedom of "School let out,"
Come happy boys like a flock of sheep,
Hailing the snow piled, white and deep,
Past the woman, so old and gray
Hastened the children on their way.

None offered a helping hand to her,
So weak and timid, afraid to stir,
Lest the carriage wheels or the horse's feet
Should trample her down in the slippery street.

At last, came out of the merry troop
The gayest boy of all the group;
He paused beside her, and whispered low,
"I'll help you across if you wish to go!"

Her aged hand on his strong, young arm
She placed, and so, without hurt or harm,
He guided the trembling feet along,
Proud that his own were firm and strong;
Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy and well content.

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know,
For all she's aged and poor and slow;
And some one some time may lend a hand
To help my mother—you understand!—
If ever she's poor and old and gray,
And her own dear boy is far away."

"Somebody's mother" bowed her head
In her home that night, and the prayer she said
Was: "God be kind to that noble boy,
Who is somebody's son and pride and joy."

Faint was the voice and worn and weak,
But heaven lists when its chosen speak;
Angels caught the faltering word,
And "somebody's mother's" prayer was heard.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Of all diffident men that I ever met, Augustus Chandler was the worst. As a child he was the dunce of the school, simply because he could not recite a well-learned lesson with the bright-eyed, girlish faces around him.

"I shall have to get a private tutor for him," said his father, in utter despair. "He never will make anything unless I do."

The boy proved the wisdom of such a course by making rapid progress; then graduating at a celebrated college with enviable honors, and entering enthusiastically upon his choice profession, that of a physician; a strange one, indeed, for such a diffident man. Stranger, still, he advanced rapidly until he had a well-established paying practice.

After the death of his parents, he lived alone in the comfortable homestead, his fathers home and his grandfather's before him, with two old servants who had grown gray in the family service.

"All he wants is a wife," his friends all agreed, but he was content.

Constant association with his fellow mortals so far overcome his timidity that he was no longer conspicuous in that respect, but had settled down into a sober, retiring batchelor.

Then an uncle, who had accumulated an enormous fortune in India, died leaving him sole heir to the wealth which he had denied himself even the comforts of life to obtain.

Somehow he found that life suddenly presented a different aspect, and he found that a country doctor, no matter how talented, and a gentleman with a good bank account were far different persons as the world goes.

Mammas with marriageable daughters smiled sweetly upon him, and the fair damsels themselves greeted him with shy glances from demurely downcast eyes, that set his pulses to dancing in a way as bewildering as it was terrible.

Mr. Chandler's opinion was all-powerful, and no entertainment was complete without his presence.

"You ought to marry," said one friend after another.

But he only smiled in a superior way as he avoided the quicksands of matrimony.

At last there came to Wakefield a comely widow of thirty-five or thereabouts. She had not been comfortably settled in the place a week before she knew the exact income and bank account of Augustus Chandler.

The knowledge satisfied her exceedingly; but being a woman well-skilled in human nature, she did not begin an open siege of his well-fortified heart.

She simply lay in ambush and awaited her chance, which came at last, as it always does to patient waiters.

It was a lovely day in June, and a merry party were assembled in the cool oak grove behind the Chandler mansion.

No one knew how it happened—the unlucky man himself could never tell—but the pretty widow and their obliging host soon strayed away from the others, and at an artfully expressed wish went to view the rooms of the mansion.

With pretty exclamations of delight she sought out the nooks dear to him from his childhood, while he followed with a pleasant smile, until she stood upon a vine-covered balcony.

"It is all perfect—the house, I mean," began the widow, artfully. "There is but one thing wanting."

"And what is that?" asked Augustus, eager to remedy any defect.

"It seems—well—just a little gloomy," began the widow, slowly.

"Yes," admitted he, with a deep sigh, thinking of the faces that had brightened the homestead in other days.

"I think—in fact—well, Mr. Chandler, [illegible] be so bold—I should say the [illegible] needed [illegible] wife," answered [illegible], bluntly looking at him with [illegible] ones. A home becomes a necessity, and as old age creeps on, we feel more and more the need of some one whose interests are identical with our own. That is the case with me. I have never known a happy hour since poor, dear Harry left me."

A snowy handkerchief covered her eyes, and Augustus Chandler looked around for some means of escape. Tears were something he could not withstand.

"Could you—would you," he began, for want of something to say, with true masculine blundering choosing the wrong words, playing into the widow's hand as a bird into a fowler's snare—"could you think of marrying again?"

"I mi-might," sobbed the widow, "I am so lonely."

"Could you? I am an old man now, I know, but I—"

He was about to say that he never intended to marry, when the widow artlessly interrupted him:

"You old? Why, you are just in the prime of life," she said, with a dazzling smile.

"Would you—I have known you but a short time, but I feel as though I had known you a life-time—would you accept?" he stammered, with a vague idea of offering her a handsome annuity that would place her above want and give her enjoyment and ease.

"Of course I would, dear Augustus. You needn't say another word. I have heard how diffident you are—so like poor, dear Harry! You mean will I accept you—is that it, dearest?"

"Ye-e-e-s!"

The word was breathed, rather than spoken by trembling lips; but for the world he could not say "No."

That was a word which he never could speak to a pretty woman.

"I knew it, dearest! Don't think me unwomanly for helping you a bit," she murmured, slipping one arm around his neck, and placing her red lips bewilderingly near his, just as a party of young people came up the walk.

It was all over now! In a maze he heard and accepted the congratulations from every side, with the radiant widow leaning upon his arm.

Fearful of losing her prize, she fixed the wedding day early in July.

The preparations were made, and Augustus Chandler went like a lamb to the slaughter, to request the parson—a life-long friend—to perform the ceremony.

"I'm glad you are to have a home at last, Gus," he began. "Mrs. Porter is a lovely, accomplished woman. I wish you joy—but goodness, man, you look as though you expected to be buried instead of married!"

"I wish I was!" groaned the unhappy man.

And, forthwith, he told the story of his engagement.

"And so you don't want to marry the widow?" asked the clergyman.

"No!" answered Chandler, emphatically.

"Why didn't you say so to her then?"

"Why? Because I am a fool. I never could say no where a woman was concerned. You know that, George."

"Hum!" began Mr. Shaw, musingly. "Well I'll be on hand, and advise you to answer 'Yes' to every question."

Whatever hope in his friend's aid had brightened Augustus Chandler's heart, died a natural death, and he passed a sleepless night, pacing the floor of the chamber that would soon be shared with another.

At nine o'clock the entire population men, women and children—were assembled at the little church to witness the wedding. Very fair and triumphant the widow looked in her bridal robes, and Augustus himself was all that could be expected in a calm, self-possessed bridegroom.

"Only the entreating, agonized look he threw his friend, the clergyman, as he arose to begin the ceremony, told that he was suffering tortures.

As in a dream he heard and mechanically answered the questions.

"And do you, Augustus Chandler, refuse to take this woman for your lawfully wedded wife?" asked Mr. Shaw, with great emphasis and a significant look.

The blood rushed in a torrent over Chandler's face; every nerve tingled as he grasped his friend's meaning and saw the loophole of escape.

"Yes!" he yelled, wildly.

And then rushed cowardly down the aisle, out through the open door, and along the village street to the homestead by the oaks, as though pursued by fiends.

The widow screamed and went into hysterics. Confusion reigned; but, securely locked in his room, the rescued man cared little for that.

A settlement was at last effected through the agency of his lawyer, and a generous slice of his uncle's fortune consoled the disappointed woman for the loss of a husband.

Did he profit by the escape?

For a year or two he lived a secluded life, avoiding the feminine portion of the community, especially widows, as he would the plague of Egypt, and then he astonished his neighbors by bringing a wife to gladden the old homestead—a rosy cheeked lassie whom he married for love.

Although he often jokes about her and their courtship, tradition furnishes no account of the event; but her blushes, whenever the subject is mentioned, convince me that the second wooing would furnish a story as well as the first.

However that may be, it is very certain that Augustus Chandler has always been satisfied with the result.—[Exchange.

THE PROPER THING.

The new fashionable brown is golden seal.

The princesse style will be revived for evening toilets.

Dull red cloth suits are in great favor for young ladies.

Fur enters largely into the fine cloth coats made by English tailors.

Green billiard cloth is the latest fancy for young ladies' short jackets.

Lace handkerchiefs are seldom seen except upon full dress occasions.

White boucle plush bonnets are the novelty for dress hats for next winter.

Scotch pins of cairngorms, and of silver enamelled in bright bars are used for cloak and shawl fastening.

Velvet skirts, made full and plain or finished with narrow plaitings of the velvet, are to be worn this fall.

A red cloth eton jacket with officer's buttons of gilt along the edges, is a pretty addition to youthful gowns.

The popular thing in seal is the paletot, though the newmarket finds favor with those who have long purses.

Red is decidedly a favorite color for cloth mantles, and otter, beaver, sable or other brown fur is the trimming.

Eton jackets with a short vest and chemisette or guimpe are the newest fancy for children to wear with kilt skirts.

Bright colored basques which are at once so pretty and invariably becoming are worn with cashmere or silk skirts.

A novelty in corsets has no bones, only coarse boar's hair run in all over, giving sufficient substance and support without pressure.

The redingotes made by tailors are without pleats behind, but open in the back from the tournure down; dull red is the favorite color.

Long draperies with full effects, and the short plastron in place of a vest, are with fur bindings and panels, the new features of cloth gowns.

In basques, the darts are carried up very high and are nearer together at the waist line, giving the long waisted, slender appearance so much sought.

Ribbons of fanciful weaves and designs are used to excess in dress trimmings, not only as bows, loops and flots, but laid flat like galloon or wide braid.

A Polish lancer's jacket, a short coat smooth on the tournure, single-breasted and trimmed across the front with cords of passementerie, is a stylish winter garment.

A pretty caprice in imported dresses is that of putting a fold of ribbon, an inch wide folded doubly, inside the collar and wrists of dresses. Poppy red is most favored for these folds, and a very small bow is placed on one side.

A Model Wife.

Jones was well aware that his wife was in the habit of rifling his pocket when he was asleep, but, like a wise man, he kept silence on the subject. One night, however he awoke and caught her in the act.

"Ha!" he exclaimed, "what are you doing, my dear."

The lady started, her cheeks flushed, the pantaloons dropped from her grasp, and she was about to make a full confession when a bright idea entered her head. Recovering her composure she she said:

"I was looking to see if whether your pantaloons needed any buttons."

"They do, they do, my dear," he exclaimed, springing from the bed. "needed 'em for weeks, months, and I wondered why you didn't sew 'em on; but I waited, for I was sure you would get to it some time. And how kind of you to get out of bed at this time of night to attend to 'em. Say what you will, there's nothing in the world like a good wife. Let me turn up the gas a little, so you'll have all the light you want in sewing them on. Got your needle and thread and the buttons? No. Well, tell me where they are and I will get them for you."

Mrs. Jones proceeded to sew on the buttons, while her husband sat on the side of the bed and encouraged her with words of praise for her wifely care and thought for his comfort, occasionally remarking that go where he would he always say there was nothing in the world like a good wife.

Then he went to the wardrobe and brought out several pairs of trousers, a coat, two or three old vests, and a number of shirts, from all which, buttons were missing, and cheerily observed:

"While we're at it we'll make a night of it."

Two hours later, when Mrs. Jones, with a weary sigh, removed the thimble from her finger, Mr. Jones patted her on the cheek and said:

"I say it again, my dear, say it again, that wherever I go I will make it known proclaim it from the housetops, shout it in the highways and byways that a wife who gets up in the middle of the night to sew buttons on her husband's clothes is a priceless treasure, a crown to that husband, and an ornament to her sex."

Then Mr. Jones, chuckling to himself lay calmly down and slept the sleep of the just.—[Detroit Free Press.

A New King on the Throne!

"Malaria," as a popular ailment," has given place to a new potentate.

If you have Rheumatism now, the medical wiseacres exclaim—"Uric Acid"

If you have frequent headaches, they sagely remark—"Uric Acid"!

If you have softening of the brain, they insist that it is—"Uric Acid"!

If Sciatica or Neuralgia make life miserable, it is—"Uric Acid"!

If your skin breaks out in Boils and Pimples, it is—"Uric Acid"!

If you have Abcesses and piles, "Uric Acid" has set your blood on fire.

If you have dull, languid feelings backache, kidney or bladder troubles, gout, gravel, poor blood; are ill at ease, threatened with paralysis or apoplexy, vertigo; are billous, dropsical constipated or dyspeptic—"Uric Acid" is the key to the situation, the cause of all your difficulties!

We do not know as Madam Malaria will take kindly to this Masculine Usurper, but he has evidently come to stay.

"Uric Acid,"—this Monster, is the product of the decomposition—death—constantly taking place within us, and unless he is every day routed from the system, through the kidneys, by means of some great blood specific like Warner's safe cure, which Senator B. K. Bruce says snatched him from its grasp there is not the least doubt but that it will utterly ruin the strongest human constitution!

It is not a young fellow by any means. It has a long and well-known line of ancestors. It is undoubtedly the father of a very great family of diseases, and though it may be the fashion to ascribe progeny to it that are not directly its own, there can be little doubt that if it once gets thoroughly seated in the human system, it really does introduce into it most of the ailments now, per force of fashion, attributed to its baleful influence.

Carpenter Acquitted.

The Carpenter case ended very suddenly last Thursday afternoon. From the Palladium we take the following:

When the court met at two o'clock District Attorney Mead arose and said that when he became District Attorney last January he found ex-District Attorney and friends of Mrs. Carpenter pressing for an indictment. He invested the case, thought there was something in it and presented the case to the grand jury. They found an indictment against the prisoner and from that time he assumed all responsibility for the case. He had used all honorable means to secure evidence to satisfy a jury, but the proof which he had thought he was able to show had, unexpectedly to him, turned out very unsatisfactorily. Looking at this case, not as District Attorney, but from a legal stand point, he saw there had been no evidence produced which would warrant a court in submitting the case to a jury. Dr. Swinburne, of Albany, and Dr. W. A. Hall, of Fulton, two medical experts whom he had called to his aid, informed him that it was impossible to convict on the evidence. Therefore, to save further expense he moved that Warren E. Carpenter be discharged and that the court direct the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal.

Judge Russell on the part of the defense said of course he had no desire to oppose this motion. He highly complimented the District Attorney for his honor, candor and fairness toward the prisoner.

The Judge then spoke as follows,

Gentlemen of the jury: A point has been reached in this case where our labors are suddenly terminated. The District Attorney has very frankly stated in your presence the condition of the evidence he is at liberty to produce in addition to that which you have already heard. He is convinced that the evidence which has already been given in addition to that which is in his power still to produce, when added together will still be insufficient to prove that this unfortunate lady died from criminal agency. It is a principle of law, gentlemen, that has been in force for several hundred years in every English speaking country, that no person can be convicted or punished for murder unless what is known as the body of the crime is clearly established, including as an essential part of it, that the deceased died from criminal agency. Owing to the lamentable autopsy that was held in this case, the District Attorney, through no fault of his, is unable to produce that evidence in this case and the prosecution must fail. He is to be commended, and I do publicly commend him for the manly straightforward, honorable course that he has taken throughout this trial, and especially for the position that he now takes as an act of justice to the community, to you, to the court and to the prisoner. And while the doctors blundered, gentlemen, they are entitled to credit for one thing, that as honest men they came here before you and attempted to conceal no fact in their possession, but honestly told what they had omitted to do, and those omissions are the cause of the embarrasment which the District Attorney labors under.

It is not in my power under the state of the law as it now exists, to direct an acquittal; but the law allows me to advise a jury to acquit the prisoner under circumstances such as those that now exist in this case; and the law further says that it is the duty of the jury to follow such advice. I now advise you, gentlemen of the jury, to acquit Warren E. Carpenter.

The jury then brought in a verdict of not guilty without leaving their seats.

The Judge then thanked them for their patience and attention and congratulated them that their confinement was over, and discharged them.

HIS LOSS WAS HER GAIN.

"Well, madam," said a fashionable physian to a wealthy lady patient, "if you don't like my prescriptions, perhaps you had better try Parker's Tonic, or some other quack stuff." "You don't mean it Doctor," she answered, "but your advice may be good for all that. Sometimes what you call "quack stuff" is the best and most scientific medicine, after all." She got a bottle of Parker's Tonic and it cured her of neuralgia arising from disordered stomach and nerves. She told her friends, and now they all keep a doctor at home in the form of Parker's Tonic. 21w5

AN ISSUE BORN.

The Oswego Palladium of last evening contained a letter addressed to Hon. Willard Johnson of Fulton, Democratic candidate for Member of Assembly, and signed by prominent Republicans of Oswego, asking him—that if elected to office—he would urge the passage of the people's bill for a water works commissioner. In his reply Mr. Johnson promises—if elected—to do what he can to urge the passage of this bill In the question of the water supply for Oswego a square issue has been joined by Messrs Howe and Johnson. This is local question and confined to the city of Oswego but will be made an issue by both sides to effect the voters in the county.

THE latest novelty of the campaign; the forged Conkling interview.

THE President will leave Washington for Buffalo the last of the week, where he will cast a vote for Hill.

LEROY D. THOMAS, the last of the three civil service commissioners tendered his resignation to the President Saturday. The same was accepted to take effect November 1.

WOMEN of voting proclivities hereabouts, if there be any, would do well to remember that article 2, section 1, of the constitution declares that a qualified voter shall be a "male citizen."

JOHN MCCULLOUGH, the actor, has been removed from Bloomingdale asylum to his home in Philadelphia. His physicians are greatly pleased over the result of the change and are now of the opinion that he will recover his reason.

THE BOYCOTTER of New York, a journal devoted to the interests of organized labor, after a careful investigation of Gov. Hill's relation with labor organizations, advises its readers and all labor unions to vote for the Democratic candidate while at the same time denouncing The New York Tribune and the Republican candidate.

ACCORDING to the Oneida Dispatch, the Democrats of the Twenty-third district, comprising the counties of Madison, Herkimer and Otsego, have nominated for State Senator, a man of a very unsavery reputation, namely Charles E. Remick of Oneida. His record as given by the above mentioned paper is badly tainted, indeed.

IN the single scull race at pleasant Island Saturday afternoon, between Hanlanand Teemer for $1,000 a side, the latter was victorious. Hanlan's boat capsized which is probably the cause of his defeat. However, the Canadian oarsman acknowledged that he was fairly beaten by a better man and had no excuses to make.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND, Secretaries Manning and Whitney, Col. Lamont, Mr. Fairchilds and many others at Washington have each sent $1,000 to the secretary of the New York State Democratic committee to assist in the campaign. And still mugwump papers have been trying to impress the voters of the State that the administration was opposed to Hill. Contributions like these hardly substantiate the assertions made by mugwump journals.

A Large Defalcation.

John T. Jenkins, aged about 50, has been one of the most prominent members of the Park Presbyterian church in Syracuse, and the Young Men's Christian association for several years. A great deal of excitement was caused Saturday afternoon when the fact was made known that he was a defaulter to his former employers, S. P. Pierce & Sons, for whom he acted as head bookkeeper for about 10 years. The firm had the utmost confidence in him. He resigned his place a short time ago on account of ill health. An accountant was then engaged to get out a trial balance. In going over the books he found discrepancies in Mr. Jenkins' accounts. It is alleged that whole pages of the ledger were found to have been removed, and various books were not to be found, in which accounts had been kept including one bank book. It is thought that the defalcation amounts to $15,000. W. K. Pierce, the financial manager of the firm, called on Mr. Jenkins and accused him of his misdeeds. He is said to have admitted his guilt. The matter was compromised, Mr. Jenkins assigning insurance policies on his life in favor of the firm for $7,000 and guaranting to keep up the premium and giving a note for $5,000 signed by his wife. Mrs. Jenkins was in poor health and has since died. The knowledge of her husband's disgrace is said to have hastened her death.

A suit for $10,000 for breach of promise has been brought against Giles B. Everson, a young lawyer of Syracuse, by Miss Anna E. McNally, who was formerly his father's servant. Everson's father is a wealthy farmer living near Manlius.

John Roach visited Chester, Pa., Friday, for the first time in five months. He was cordially greeted by everybody, both on the street and at his office, where a number of his old employes called to pay their respects. He is regaining his mental and physical vigor.

The coroner's jury in the case of Mrs. Dickinson, who was murdered by her husband at Moravia, returned a verdict to the effect that Dickinson, when he committed the deed, was deranged by jealousy. Dickinson, who attempted to commit suicide after killing his wife, is still alive, but is in a precarious condition.

Peddlers in Cohoes are required to pay a license of $10, and the law is strictly enforced. The mayor holds that farmers, milkmen, and all commercial drummers must also take out a license. A man with samples of wool was ordered Saturday to take out a license or leave the town. He left with curses on his tongue. It is said that several wholesale grocers there will go to law to test the matter.

About 150 persons are now idle in the vicinity of the mill of Roy & Co., West Troy. The weavers claim that their employers are hard masters, exacting fines of 25 cents for every thread dropped and requiring them to work overtime nights on dark goods, when it is difficult to weave without an occasional drop, which does not in any way prevent the sale of the goods at full prices. Individual weavers claim that their fines reach from $8 to $10 a month, and that they were working on wages that had been reduced 10 per cent. They have accordingly struck.

Sheldon & Co., who have an extensive axle manufactory at Auburn, have decided to locate in Wilkesbarre. They were led to this decision by two important considerations, cheapness of fuel and the fact that the citizens of that place encouraged them to bring their industry there by promptly subscribing all the capital that was needed to successfully float the enterprise, $100,000. It is contemplated to employ from 750 to 1,000 operatives. The concern is the largest in the world. It produces nearly half of all the axles made in the United States, its annual output of goods being over a million of dollars.

COUNTY COMMENT.

William Jones of Sand Bank, in whose saloon the fire broke out which destroyed a large portion of the village, has been indicted for arson in the second degree and bail fixed at $1,500.

An adjourned meeting of the State board of claims will be hold in Oswego November 17, to hear claims arising in that vicinity, and all other claims of which notes of issue may be filed before November 2.

Frank Saternow of Oswego brought suit against Dr. Mary Walker to recover $21.25, which he claimed was due him for work done on her house. The case was tried one day last week, and the plaintiff was awarded $16.75. In summing up, the counsel for plaintiff took occasion to refer to the defendant's eccentricities. Her mode of dress was somewhat severely criticicised, and the doctor became very much excited, and implored Justice Wright to protect her from insult. The court held that as counsel was confining himself to the truth, he had no power to silence him.

ARRESTED.

Charles A. Daley was arrested last evening. He stole from the drug store of Shiefman, a bottle of Sulphur Bitters. Before the court this morning, upon being asked why he should steal, he stated that his mother was troubled with rheumatism, and that was the only medicine that helped her, and being out of money and work was the cause of his stealing. As this was his first offense he was put on probation.—[Newark News.

England has recently passed a law to loan to any tenant farmer money to buy the land which he works. He is to have 49 year's time at 3 per cent. Let us rejoice and thank God for this wise, humane and just law to relieve the poor Irish. But what are we to say of the stony-hearted, wooden-headed legislators of these United States, who refuse even to consider the proposition to loan money to American workingmen, tenants and farmers, but loan to the banks without limit at one per cent. The deeply indebted farmers of the West and South are now far worse off than the tenant farmers of Ireland! What a monarchy does for its subjects, Americans ask in vain of a Republic.—[Ex.

Roscoe Conkling is said to have changed his style of dress since his retirement from public life. His powerful shoulders, clear eye, good color and rapid movements indicate perfect health.

Dr. Newman says that all the letters received by General Grant from good people who were solicitous about his spiritual welfare, the one that touched him most was written by an aged Quaker, and ran as follows: "Friend Grant. Cheese Market.

(FROM THE UTICA HERALD.)

AT UTICA Oct. 26.

Salesmen expected a dull market to day and they got it. No one seemed to want cheese, nor was anyone very anxious to sell. Quite a number of lots were held over, in the belief that September cheese will be in demand next week. Those factorymen that sold closed out all their September make, so that the bulk of the offering next week will be October cheese. The only reason that buyers gave for the decline was that shippers were practically out of the market at present prices, and it is hard work to dispose of cheese. Another reason that struck some of the salesmen was that a good deal of small cheese is contracted for the balance of the season at certain figures above the ruling, and it is for the interest of buyers to fix the ruling as low as they reasonably can. Transactions for the day are as follows: Six lots, 600 boxes, at 9½c.; 43 lots, 3,828 boxes, at 9⅝c.; 5 lots, 498 boxes, at 9¾c.; 6 lots, 880 boxes, at 9⅞c.; 8 lots, 677 boxes, at 10c.; 4 lots, 352 boxes, at 10⅛c.; 4 lots, 376 boxes, at 10¼c. Sales, 7,211 boxes; commission, 523 boxes; total, 7,734 boxes: Ruling price 9⅝c. Transactions one year ago, 8,966 boxes, ruling price, 11⅛c.; two years ago they were 8,325 boxes, ruling 11¾c. We quote the market as dull and without special feature.

LITTLE FALLS, Oct. 26.

CHEESE.—There was an unusually large number present at the market to-day, and the subjects discussed were in a large degree foreign to the cheese and butter trade; many politicians were present and the general interest in election turned the attention of those present to political subjects. It was early announced that prices in New York had dropped and that a decline of one-half cent would be indicated here to-day. As the time for closing drew near, however, there appeared a marked improvement and prices paid are about up to those paid a week ago. There are not so many sold at 10¼c., and there being a closer discrimination in quality, prices ranged down as low as 9c., while last week none went below 10c. Fully one-fourth cent difference was shown in favor of colored cheese, fine grades of which were eagerly sought for. Stock showing any imperfection in quality was neglected unless at quite a difference in price. Following are the sales:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price
1	60	9 cts
13	931	9½cts
5	330	9¾cts
44	2,964	10 cts

Farm Dairy	840

FARM DAIRIES.—Sales reached 840 boxes and prices ranged at 9@10½c., the ruling figure being 10¼c.; only two lots brought 10½c.

BUTTER.—There were 130 packages of farm dairy butter sold at a range of 19@22c.. the bulk at 21c. Twelve packages of creamery sold at 24c.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Owing to the filthy condition of many premises in our village, the Board of Health urgently request all owners or occupants of houses, whose privies, outhouses and vaults have not been cleaned out and renovated, that they do the same at once and put their premises in good, wholesome, sanitary condition while the weather permits, remembering that while we are benefitting ourselves, we are conferring a great favor upon the public.

Hay Fever Cured by Cream Balm.

[illegible] residence of W. G. Gage last Friday evening. The occasion was an impromptu party given by Mrs. Fred Gage. The rare tact displayed by the host and hostess in making each guest feel that his or her natural sphere was to revel in social turmoil, showed them to be masters of the art of entertaining. By nine o'clock the spacious parlors were filled with the elite of Fulton society, and to the charming music of "David" the Syracuse pianist, lovers of the dance whirled in the mazy waltz, while the more sober minded sought the delights of conservatories and games. With pleasure at its height the hours flew on space, but nature will out and in the feast of reason that followed, the most critical epicurean would have been silenced by the delicate flavorings of the various ices, creams, fruits, salads, meats, coffee and what not? In song and talk, dance and walk time flies fast and the happy hours would speed away. With joy depicted on every countenance the guests departed, a happy throng. The following is a partial list of those present as they occur to the mind of THE TIMES man: Mr. and Mrs. Jno. H. Case, Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. VanWagenen, Dr. W. A. Hall and wife, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Emerick, Mr. and Mrs. N. N. Stranahan, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Benedict, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Webb, Mr. and Mrs. A. Bristol, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hillick, Mr. and Mrs. James Sheridan, Mr. and Mrs. Dell Tucker, Hon. Henry Howe and wife, Frank Willard, Langdon Foster, John Hadcock, Jay Harrington, John Morton, Miss Georgie Lovejoy, Chas. Allen, Miss Rebecca Stewart, James Morton, Miss Florence Markham, Edward Wolcott, H. B. Collins, Miss Fannie Stevenson, Lovell Johnson, F. Byrne, Chas. Tucker, Howard Case, Miss May Loomis, John A. McKay, Mrs. H. Balpry, A. Rosenbloom, Mrs. Mary Butler, Mrs. Carrie Leonard, Miss Fannie Reynolds, Chas. R. Nichols, Wm. Lovejoy, Miss Carrie Willard, Miss Allie Case, Miss May French, the Misses Morton, Miss Grace, Miss Eva Case, Miss Alice Youngs, Miss Lillian Howe, Miss Carrie Jennings, the Misses Kimball, Mrs. Chas. Sabin, Mrs. W. E. Williams, Miss Grace Tucker, Miss Mollie Johnson, Miss Gertrude Dada, Miss Allie Stevens, Miss Ada Thayer, Miss May Gardner, Mrs. Jennie Barnes, Mrs. E. Lathrop, Miss Frank French, Mrs. Dr. Woodbury, Miss Hattie Nelson, Miss Hattie DeGraw, of Fulton. Mr. and Mrs. James Herrick, of Oswego, Miss Tyra Tucker of Baldwinsville, and Mrs. George Gleuzier of New York.

They Want the Phœnix Road.

The Phœnix Register of last week in speaking of the difficulties existing between the S. P. & O., railroad and the R. W. & O. road, says: "How long this arrangement will remain we are not prepared to say, but the people have this consoling reflection, that the route has demonstrated itself to be too valuable a one to remain long without trains. Several companies are reported to have made proposals for the road, prominent among them being the D. L. & W., whose plan is understood to be to connect with their present line at Fulton by crossing the river at that point, and building an independent line from Woodard to connect with the S. P. & O. track through the first and second wards of Syracuse, to hay market square. Such an arrangement would give a paying route, and at the same time remove all opposition from the Oswego and Syracuse division of the D. L. & W. road, but it would by no means be for the best interests of the village, as it would practically deprive us of the competition which would exist in case the road here was operated by some other company.

Entertain the Teachers.

I will be at the store of Frank Bacon, President Board of Education on Wednesday Nov. 4, 1885, for the purpose of making arrangements for the entertainment of teachers at the coming institute. I shall be glad to see any there who will aid in this matter. Such as cannot be present will confer a favor by sending their names, residence and number of teachers they can entertain and designating whether gentlemen or ladies.

Timely Advice.

The forethought of Mrs. Petrawichkey from Darshenick Warsafska Gouberna, that it is equally as well to buy your winter clothing before it is real cold weather, as to make hay when the sun shines.

That if one is forearmed, that is forewarned.

He will be best clothed who takes our advice and goes to H. & A. Rosenbloom's to make his purchases.

That if the shadows give notice of coming events, the real excellence of men's, youths' and children's suits and overcoats at H. & A. Rosenbloom's indicates enormous sales this fall.

The fact is that H. & A. Rosenbloom have a stock of cloaks in the dry goods department which is for the interest of purchasers to carefully examine as to quality, style, manufacture, fit and price."

The Lorellas in "Mishaps," appeared in Stephens opera house Monday evening to a large audience and gave excellent satisfaction. The singing of Miss Rita Chase was an important feature of the evening. The three Lorella brothers elicited much applause by their contortions in the wonderful goblin scene. Should they visit Fulton again they are assured of a warm welcome.

Great precautions are being taken in Oswego against the introduction of smallpox. A quarantine was established Monday by government officials, and two physicians have been appointed who will board and make thorough examination of all incoming vessels and barges before permitting them to enter the harbor. A surf boat in charge of a crew from the Life Saving station will put the doctors on board. Vaccination is general in the city.

The Boston Bazaar Opening.

The Boston Bazaar's opening which occurred last Friday and Saturday was visited by hundreds of people of this village and surrounding country, who went away rejoicing at the wonderful bargains they had secured. Never before was the Bazaar stocked with as choice and large a line of goods as it is this fall. The store is filled from ceiling to floor. Messrs Ney & Allen are bound to please the public. They are close buyers, which of course, enables them to sell their goods at very low prices. Their stock of yarns is complete in all grades and colors. The hosiery, glove and underwear departments alone, are deserving of special attention. Notions, vases, fancy crockery, plush goods in frames and albums, toys, hanging lamps, beautiful in design, dolls, tinware, picture frames and hundreds of articles of use in the household and elsewhere, which we have not space to mention, help to make up the big stock. It is a fact that the Bazaar is the place for bargains.

Electric Lights.

By reference to the Trustees proceedings in another column it will be seen that the Excelsior Electric Co. have petitioned the Board and received permission to erect poles and construct and maintain wires for the purpose of lighting the village by electricity. Mr. D. Hyman of Watertown, has been in town some time in the interest of the company and it is said that a number of our enterprising merchants have decided to avail themselves of the new light. If a sufficient number of them subscribe, work will commence at once.

New Dry Goods Store.

John C. O'Brien of Oswego, has leased the store in the opera house block, formerly occupied by B. J. Dyer, and has put in a fine line of dry goods, etc. Everything in the store is new, having been recently purchased in New York, and customers will find that they can be suited in quality of goods as well as price. The opening occurred last Saturday, and judging from the crowds in the store during the evening, the new merchant's reception was very cordial.

Last Saturday an intoxicated individual attempted to cross T. D. Lewis' new building on the rafters. He had not progressed far when he fell striking his nose, almost severing that organ from his head. The wound was sewed up by Dr. E. F. Marsh.

The concert for the benefit of Fred Kenyon, which occurs Friday evening Nov. 6, will be held in the opera house instead of the Presbyterian church, as was first announced. The change was necessary owing to the unusually large sale of tickets. An entertainment of a high order may be expected.

Levi Beach of Phœnix, who has been employed by John Frazee, of Clay, received a letter a short time ago from a party in Fulton offering him a situation. The letter was signed "Miss Matie ——," He is unable to read the surname of the writer or to find the situation he has been offered. If the writer of the letter will give him her address again as soon as possible she will confer a favor.

Repairs on the apron of the Phœnix state dam, under direction of Supt. Richardson, are fast nearing completion. About 175 feet of new work has been put in. Cribs have been sunk in some ten feet of water. The best pine timber is used and the work done in the most substantial manner. Engineer Richmond and commissioner Stebbins visited the work on Saturday and pronounced it a superior job. John Boardman is foreman of the work.

The Miaco's Humpty Dumpty and Specialty company at an engagement at the academy last evening, gave a very satisfactory performance of "Humpty Dumpty," and a speciality olio, that is seldom seen in the academy. The entire preformance was highly pleasing, and Mr. Miaco should have a large attendance during his stay. The daring feats of Prof. Kane, the singing of Miss Stickney and St. Clair, Messrs Miaco and Smeed on the horizontal bar, Prince Pharsh, the contortionist, Miss Stickney on the invisible wire, Prof. Kane in his daring acts, and Prof. Clark's dog circus, all should be seen to be appreciated. [illegible] had been confined to his bed. Yesterday morning his wife went to one of the neighbors, and during her absence he arose from the bed, and went to the kitchen, and took off the clean shirt his wife had just put on, changed his clothes and then went to the back door where a kettle of water stood. He got down on his hands and knees and held his head under the water until life was extinct. He was found in this position by his wife upon her return. During his sickness he has had spells when it was thought he was insane. He has frequently asked the neighbors when they were present with him to get him some morphine or something to kill himself, as he was tired of life. He had a daughter that committed suicide in Syracuse about four years ago. His son still lives in that city. Much sympathy is felt for his wife, who is an old lady and has waited upon him as a child during his long illness.

Cornor Marsh was notified and after impanneling a jury, held an inquest at which a verdict of suicide by drowning was rendered.

KIDNEY REMEDY.

A shadow, and only a moving shadow of a once robust, healthy and vigorous person reduced to a mere shadow by the same original cause that has carried thousands to an early grave. The ravages of excessive indulgences, catarrh, bronchitis, consumption, dyspepsia, disease of the liver, constipation, hemorrhoids or piles, kidney troubles, urinary and uterine diseases, blood impurities and the gradual using up of nature's gains until seemingly a shadow only of the once vigorous physical organization remains. Worn out by disease, overwork, indiscretion and unavailing efforts to find relief and a cure, the shadow moves about weary with tottering steps, waiting and wishing for the angel of death to relieve him. The best rations for making milk in winter that I have ever tried is two or three quarts of cotton seed meal mixed with four to eight quarts of wheat bran or shorts, according to the size and age of the cows. This should be given at two feeds, morning and night.—[Cor. of Farm and Home.

Potato stalks should be left through the winter where they grow. They are rich in fertilizing value, and protect the surface from blowing and leashing through the winter. It is sometimes recommended to carry them into the barnyard for manure, but they are of more value where they were grown.

Rancid butter may be restored, or at all events greatly improved, by melting it with some freshly burnt and coarsely powdered animal charcoal (which has been thoroughly freed from dust by sifting) in a water bath, and then straining it through clean flannel. A better and less troublesome method is to well wash the butter with some good, new milk and next with cold spring water. Butyric acid, on the presence of which rancidity depends, is freely soluble in fresh milk.—[Scientific American.

Thomas Ramsey, a farmer of Posey county, Indiana, recently attained his sixtieth berthday. To his kinsmen and friends who were met to celebrate with him the occasion, he made the following remarkable statement: "I have never in my life taken a dose of medicine nor a drink of spirituous liquors, nor used tobacco in any form. I have never sworn an oath nor given my note, and was never, that I can remember, in debt. I have never failed to pay my taxes when due, never voted other than a Democratic ticket, and never have failed to save a little money any year since I was of age, when I began farming.

Every-Day Romance.

A young man, well dressed and laboring under great mental excitement, presented himself at Castle Garden yesterday morning almost before the sun had fairly risen and inquired for Mr. Jackson, the superintendent. On being informed that he had not yet arrived he lit a cigar and commenced pacing up and down the building. At frequent intervals he would consult his watch. Finally he approached a watchman and asked how soon the passengers from the steamship Spain would land. The answer that it would be several hours increased his nervousness and evident anxiety.

He passed out of the gate, only to return after an hour's walk in the Battery. At last the steamship's dark hull and lofty spars, almost hidden by the mist and black smoke, appeared steaming slowly up the river. A few minutes later a stream of steerage passengers poured into the rotunda, ladened with boxes, bags and bundles of clothing and household articles brought to the New World as relics of the old home.

The young man stood at the wicket fence that separates the rotunda, peering through the pickets. As each passenger passed he trembled and muttered as if disappointed.

"Will she come?" he asked aloud.

Nearly all the new arrivals had passed but when suddenly his appearance changed, his eyes lit up, his face from white turned scarlet and with a shout he called, joyfully: "Polly, here I am."

The next instant a buxom young English girl, rosy and fresh, with large brown eyes and wavy dark hair, stood on the other side of the fence and with two arms between the bars encircled the young man's neck and drew his face to hers and saluted his lips with several rousing smacks.

After this interchange of affection both stepped up to the desk to register. The young girl stood mutely looking at her companion, who answered all the questions put in a manner that would have done credit to an auctioneer selling goods.

Her name was Polly Ruffles, from Northampton, England, aged 20. She came to America to meet Herman Morris and keep the vows made two years ago to become his bride. Herman appeared very anxious to depart.

"I want to take Polly to Brooklyn," said he, "where I live, at No. 263 Humbolt street. After I have introduced her to my friends we are to be married."

Polly appeared highly pleased with her sweet-heart's reception and related the story of their romance.

"I met Herman years ago in England," said she. "We fell in love and agreed to marry. Herman's folks thought he had better come to America to make his fortune before he married, so a year ago he left me and sailed away. You should see the letters he has written me in that year," she exclaimed, proudly. "They will fill a trunk."

Herman in the meanwhile was tugging at the cloak of his future spouse, [illegible] her to come with him. Amid [illegible] of congratulations they left [illegible] Brooklyn and wedded bliss.—[New [illegible] Journal.

What is the use of suffering with [illegible], Rheumatism, Kidney Dis[illegible] [illegible]

That the [illegible] region near or within the Arctic Circle is growing more and more inhospitable is indicated by several circumstances. For several years past there has been a considerable immigration of the people of Iceland into that part of North America which lies just north of Minnesota. If the winters of that hyperborean section are more merciful than those of their own country, it can be no cause for wonder that the people of Iceland are so eager to quit their native land. For a thousand years their ancestors had lived on that lonely northern isle, and got along comfortably, so far as is known; but the increasing rigors of the climate for the last twenty or thirty years, appear to have disheartened even the native Icelanders. Dr Kane speaks of a similar state of things existing among the Esquimaux along the shores of Baffin's Bay and Smith's Sound; he says these poor people are rapidly and surely dying out, and will soon be exterminated. Once there were thousands where there are now but a few scores. The same thing seems to be killing off or driving off, the people of the Labrador coast. The poor fishermen whose huts are perched among the rocks on the desolate northern shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, have suffered a series of years of famine. Every spring, for some years past, the report has come that they were dying of starvation. Their fisheries have failed. On these they have relied for subsistence, since the cold and rocky shore with its summer frosts, affords no chance for farms and gardens. The fish (mostly cod and mackerel) seem to have been driven out of that part of the Gulf by the increasing coldness of the water; at all events they have disappeared, and the fisheries have failed miserably this year. People are obliged to beg for a living, of the few who have the means to give. A government steamer left Quebec last Saturday, loaded with fuel and flour to alleviate the sufferings of the fishermen and their families on the Labrador coast. It is a fearful region—as gloomy and forbidding as the shores of Greenland, though in summer without their snow. In Greenland itself the climate is known to be far more severe than it was when the Northmen discovered and named that country for verdure and its vines. That, to be sure, was in the south part of that vast island; but, even there, all now is desolation. As to the poor people of Labrador, a Quebec dispatch says:

"Their supply of flour has been entirely exhausted, and to add to their sufferings and privations, scurvy has made its appearance, and many have died of it. The sufferings of the women and children beggar description. Little ones are dying in the arms of their mothers, who have no nourishment to give them."

New England lies far enough to the north for winter habitation. That angle of 23½ degrees which is called "the obliquity of the ecliptic" gives us about all the winter we want—and a little more than is always agreeable. After the sun has left our Northern hemisphere, it is pleasanter to think of isles and shores that he still will brighten and warm, even when these Northern lands are dark in shadow and buried in snow, or shivering in polar blasts. The climate changes we have referred to do not seem to be limited to the far Northern regons; they affect the more temperate parts of the globe. It is known that the climate of ancient Greece was much more salubrious 2,500 years ago than it is now; and the same thing seems to be true of many other countries. Is the planet slowly entering upon another of its long cold cycles?—[Hartford Times.

DON'T YOU DO IT.

Don't suffer any longer with the pains and aches of Rheumatism, which make life a burden to you. Relief, speedy and permanent can be procured at the nearest drug store, in the form of Kidney-Wort. Elbridge Malcolm of West Bath, Maine says: "I was completely prostrated with Rheumatism and Kidney troubles and was not expected to recover. The first dose of Kidney-Wort helped me. Six doses put me on my feet, it has now entirely cured me and I have had no trouble since."

Heroism at Home.

How useless our lives seem to us sometimes! How we long for an opportunity to perform some great action! We become tired of a routine of home life, and imagine we should be far happier in other scenes. We think of life's great battlefield, and we wish to be heroes. We think of the good we might do if our lot had been cast in different scenes. We forget that the world bestows no such noble titles as father, mother, sister or brother. In the sacred precincts of home we have many chances for heroism. The daily acts of self denial for the good of a loved one, the gentle words of soothing for another's trouble, the care for the sick, may all seem as nothing; yet who can tell the good they accomplish? Our slightest word may have an influence over another for good or evil. We are daily sowing the seed which will bring forth some sort of harvest. Well will it be for us if the harvest be one we shall be proud to gather. If some one in that dear home circle can look back in after years, and as he tenderly utters our name, say: "Her words and example prepared me for a life of usefulness; to her I owe my happiness," we may well say, I have not lived in vain.—[Christian at Work.

FROM DEATH'S DOOR.

M. M. Devereaux of Iona, Mich., was a sight to behold. He says: "I had no action of the Kidneys and suffered terribly. My legs were as big as my body and my body as big as a barrel. The best doctors gave me up. Finally I tried Kidney-Wort. In four or five days a change came, in eight or ten days I was on my feet, and now I am completely cured. It was certainly a miracle." All druggists keep Kidney-Wort which is put up both in liquid and dry form.

At the battle of Gettysburg I was shot through the left leg and was sent to the hospital. The army surgeons relieved me but pronounced my case incurable. The position of Secretary is the great one of the Cabinet and the only one in which a cabinet officer has any opportunity for making a reputation. In general that position has been held by representative men in national politics. The curiosity of the Senators to learn how Mr. Manning will conduct himself this winter is not therefore surprising. —T. C. Crawford.

[illegible] his children, the oldest [illegible] youngest 3 years old. The latter was very troublesome, and the old man's patient efforts to care for and quiet it aroused much sympathy for it among the passengers. He was on his way with his children to San Francisco.

"These are not my grandchildren, but my children," he said in answer to a passenger's inquiry. "They are the youngest of twenty-three that my wife bore me. She died in Ocean county, New Jersey, where we always lived, a few weeks ago. She was only 58 years old. I am 60. We were married forty-one years ago. My oldest child, a daughter, is forty years old. She has eleven children and three of them are married and have children. Fourteen of my twenty-three children are married and scattered all over the continent. I have decendants in every State in the Union, but I don't know how many. I have never known of a single death of any of my children, but several of my grandchildren have died. The next to the oldest of my family are sons and twins. They are 39 years old. I have a daughter 38 years old, and one 36 who are grandmothers.

"We had children every year the first three years we were married, and then every two years until this biggest girl here was born. There were three years between her birth and the next oldest brother. I have twin daughters 32 years old, and a pair of twin sons 16 years old. These three children here are just two years apart, all being born in the same week and month of their different years. Their mother's health was always good. Her death was the result of an accident. She tripped in coming down stairs and fell to the bottom. If she had lived she would in a short time been the mother of her twenty-fourth child.

"My oldest daughter lives in California. Her husband is wealthy, and they have sent for me to come with all my helpless little ones, and spend the rest of my days with them. These are all my children that are left at home. I have no daughters unmarried except these three. My youngest boy is 10, and he is well provided for in New Jersey." —[New York Sun.

Married People would be Happier.

If home troubles were never told to a neighbor.

If expenses were proportioned to receipts.

If they tried to be as agreeable as in courtship days.

If each would try to be a support and comfort to the other.

If each would remember the other was a human being, not an angel.

If each was as kind to the other as when they were lovers.

If fuel and provisions were laid in during the high tide of summer work.

If both parties remember that they married for worse as well as for better.

If men were as thoughtful for their wives as they were for their sweethearts.

If their were fewer silk and velvet street costumes, and more plain, tidy house dresses.

If there were fewer "please, darling" in public and more common manners in private.

If masculine bills for Havana and feminine ditto for rare lace were turned into the general fund until such times as they could be incurred without risk.

If men would remember that a woman cannot be always smiling who has to cook the dinner, answer the door bell half a dozen times, and get rid of a neighbor who has dropped in, tend a sick baby, tie up the cut finger of a two-year old, tie up the head of a six-year old on skates, and get an eight-year old ready for school. A woman with all this to contend with may claim it as a privilege to look and feel a little tired some-times, and a word of sympathy would not be too much to expect from the man who, during the honeymoon, would not let her carry as much as a sun-shade.—[N. Chewing Gum Advised.

"Thinness is a physical characteristic of Americans. I account for this because of the fact that they are in a new country to whose climate they have not become used. Even the descendants of people who came to America two hundred years ago are not fully acclimated. This is true it matters not to what country people may remove. Natural history has demonstrated that at least three hundred years are required to acclimatize a nation that has taken up its abode in a new country. Now, as thinness is a characteristic of Americans, they ought to use whatever will make them fat and they ought not to use what will keep them lean. The habit of chewing gum causes certain juices which aid digestion to flow freely, unmixed with any injurious substance. The habit of chewing tobacco also cause these juices to flow freely, but the tobacco chewer either expels them from his mouth or swallows them mixed with the poisonous juice of the weed. I see you have your note book out; just jot down this fact: Twenty years ago the rule was that southern women were thin and delicate; it is not the rule now. Southern women are not physically equaled in all North America. Any physician who is well informed as he ought to be will tell you that this is true. This change is due to the habit of chewing gum.

You may smile, you may even laugh, if you please, but I am telling you a plain fact. As to southern men, they are thin and guant as they ever were, and so they will remain until they cease to chew tobacco and begin to chew gum. [Macon Messenger.

New York just now is crowded with Englishmen, who seem to think that our summer is too hot and our winter too cold for them. They consider that the Indian summer is the proper season to pay a flying visit to America, and every steamer is bringing over a horde of English dudes and a few French ones. The elections in both France and England have kept the more influential and substantial people at home, and it is only the younger generation that is flaunting about Broadway and the fashionable cafes there.

The Summer Land of Song.

BY [illegible]

Far beyond earth's widest boundaries
Is a land of endless day,
Where life's storms, cares and troubles
Will [illegible] away.
O, that we by faith could see it,
And with hearts quite brave and strong,
Wait with patience soon to meet there,
In the summer land of song.

In that land of wondrous beauty
We will find a peaceful rest,
Rest from weary years of battle
In communion with the blest,
And with friends long since departed,
Who have joined the heavenly throng,
We will sing the songs of glory
In the summer land of song.

O, that we may win the conflict
Over life and death and sin,
And at last may have the message,
"Come, oh soldier, come thou in."
Then, oh then, we'll join those anthems,
Heavenly anthems loud and long,
And be happy through all [illegible]
In the summer land of song.

AT THE OLD RED FARMHOUSE

People called Lela Brownson "peculiar." Perhaps they were right; but then a girl with seventy-five thousand dollars of her own when she is ten days old, and two hundred thousand more before she is fifteen years has almost a right to be peculiar. To be an heiress is enough to make a girl different from other girls; but to be a beauty as well, and also possess a merry, cheerful, laughter-loving, generous nature—surely a creature so gifted could indulge in almost any whim or caprice, and be counted blameless by her three hundred and one dear friends.

Lela certainly claimed her privilege, and did pretty much what seemed good in her own eyes. She had a guardian, of course—an elderly brother of her mother's—an easy-tempered man, who loved his niece very dearly, but was too much devoted to business to look after her very closely.

Another relative, a matron lady, presided over the household of the heiress since the death of her father, which event took place when she was fifteen years old. Mrs. Malcom was the widow of a rather eminent artist, and an excellent lady. She also indulged Lela, and being childless, loved her with all the strength of a heart intended by God to be "motherly."

"I want to go somewhere this summer where there is nobody, Aunt Nellie," said Lela, one bright spring morning, as she gazed through the window of her home.

"Somewhere where there is nobody," responded Mrs. Malcom, with slightly elevated eyebrows.

"Yes, some place where there ain't a soul. I am going to study like—like fun. Aggie Austin learned Spanish last season while she was in such a lovely farmhouse, and used to make hay and get all burned up with the sun, the way Dio Lewis says is good for you; and I'm going to do the very same thing this season.'

"Um! You know Agnes Austin is a very poor girl, and is going to be a teacher. I do not see the necessity for you to bury yourself in that way."

"Aunt Nellie, you don't know how sick and tired I am of being the rich Miss Brownson. I overheard that Mr. Selkirk say last night; 'Oh, Brownson's pills! Are you in agony?' making fun of poor papa's advertisement. Yes, I am going away all by myself, and I am not going to take anything but the very plainest dresses—calicoes and ginghams —and I may play the part of the poor girl. Now, everyone who looks at me thinks of dollars and cents and Brownson's patent medicines."

"By yourself, Lela? Do you not want me to go with you?"

"No, Aunt Nellie, I do not. If you go there is a nameless atmosphere of wealth about you; no one would ever believe I was poor. You must go to Saratoga as usual, and if I get tired of rusticating I'll run along and join you."

"Well, I suppose you must have your own way as usual," said Mrs. Malcom reluctantly.

"Of course I must—decidedly. I will be Little Bo-Peep, who lost her sheep, and you will be quite surprised to learn how few admirers I shall find, once I am perfectly clear of the pills and liver-pads. I want to find just how loveable Lela Brownson is without the filthy lucre that arises from the ills that flesh is heir to."

"Another of your whims, dear," said Mrs. Malcom with a sigh. "Well, I hope no harm will come of it."

"Harm, Aunt Nellie? What possible harm could come of it?"

"I don't know. Somehow I do not like the idea. If you give your name people will be sure to guess who you are."

"Well, then, I won't give my name. I'll call myself Lela—Lela. I'll take your name, Aunt Nellie—Lela Malcom."

* * * * * * *

The sun was setting among the white birch trees behind the old red farmhouse —the homestead of the Parker family, near North Attleboro'—as an ancient [illegible] drew up and a young lady stepped out.

"[illegible], Aunt Mabel, here's the [illegible] come a'ready!" exclaimed Daisy, Mrs. Parker's rosy-cheeked niece.

"I declare—so it is! Well, Daisy go [illegible] her in; I can't quit the fire till [illegible] out."

[illegible] Daisy obeyed. [illegible]

[illegible] tea, that so rapidly disappeared, with astonishment. She drank fresh, creamy milk, ate fresh strawberries and admired the red flush that came and went so rapidly on Daisy's round cheeks. She retired early, and rose next morning when she heard the first stir in the house. On consulting her watch she was surprised to find the hour was five.

"Dear me, what shall I do till breakfast time?" she said to herself. "I'll take a book out and sit down beside a pile of hay."

The wish was hardly formed when it was carried out. Seated by her hay, book in hand, she watched the changing colors on the dew-drops, the shifting lights among the birch trees, and the clouds passing out of sight before the ardent gaze of the sun.

A manly footstep roused her from her reverie. A tall, dark man stood before her, dressed in a loosely-fitting suit, of gray, with a soft felt hat pulled over his grave brown eyes, and a book in his hand.

"Have I taken your seat?" inquired Lela, preparing to rise.

"Yes and no. I sit there at this hour usually, but the seat is not mine."

"Well, you may have it if you like. I think I will go and walk through that grove."

"Indeed I will not occupy the spot if I drive you from it. Is there not room for both of us?"

Lela did not know what to say or do. For a moment she wondered if this was Mr. Parker, her host, but no, he must be a much younger man, and if that was the case she certainly would have met him at supper the night before. Perhaps the Parkers had a grown-up son. This man appeared to be about 24 years of age, and somehow he had not the look of a rustic.

She stole a glance at his book. It was a medical work. He was very quiet, and Lela studied his face for some time —a very good face she thought it—resolute and perhaps a little stern.

Suddenly he looked up and caught her regarding him steadily, smiled slightly as she looked abashed, and began to talk. How well he talked, speaking on all sorts of subjects. He had traveled, and before she was aware of it had drawn from Lela an account of her one visit abroad.

"It is breakfast time," said the stranger, rising and offering his hand to assist to do likewise. "I suppose you are staying at Parker's?"

"Yes."

"I heard Daisy say they expected a friend of Miss Austin's to spend the summer."

He was one of the family then; but no, for when he entered Mrs Parker hailed him with a friendly "Good morning, Mr. Studley."

They took their places at the table and the conversation became general. Mr. Studley could talk as well to the farm people as he had done to her, and was as well posted on other subjects as on travel. Without his hat he was finer looking than with it. An earnest, thoughtful face, wonderfully attractive to Lela, who was thoroughly tired of society young men.

Days passed and Lela did not tire of the red farmhouse. She did not study much, however, though she had informed Frank Studley that she was preparing for the profession of a teacher. How her cheeks burned when she had told a falsehood!

Four weeks since Lela arrived at the farmhouse, and she still lingered, though she received letters almost every day from Mrs. Malcom, urging her to join her many friends at the seaside.

"I wonder why I like to remain here?" she said to herself, glancing over one of these epistles at the table, where the family were assembled to breakfast.

"Well, Mrs. Parker, I must leave you on Monday."

Frank Studley was the speaker. A pang shot through Lela's heart; the words seemed to answer her unspoken question.

"Yes—dear me, how the time flies! Yes, I suppose you must. Well, this is your last examination, ain't it?"

"Yes. When you see me again I shall be a full-blown M. D.," he returned laughingly.

The next day was Sunday, and Lela attended church. She was simply dressed, as indeed she had been during her whole stay. In the afternoon she wrote some letters, and in the evening went to church again, accompanied by all the Parker family.

She had not seen Mr. Studley during the whole day, and felt a delicacy about inquiring for him.

Daisy walked beside Lela, and after about half the distance to the church had been accomplished, began of her own accord to give her fuller information about their other guest than she had ever had before.

He had spent four summers with them. He was studying medicine under great difficulties, for he was very poor. She believed she was engaged to be married to Miss Austin.

How cold Lela grew when she heard this; how dull and dark the twilight seemed!

"They got acquainted right here in our house," said Daisy triumphantly.

They were now in church, and Lela saw Studley sitting in a pew near her. His eyes met hers and rested kindly on her pale face, for she had turned white, the pain in her heart was so keen.

She knew very little about the sermon, listening to it in a dazed manner with [illegible], while in truth her thoughts were far away with Aggie [illegible] of Studley [illegible] Aggie, the girl she had [illegible]! Oh, what [illegible] she now [illegible]

[illegible] they walked home under the stars. He was unusually silent till they reached the little gate; then he said suddenly, in a voice unlike his own:

"Miss Lela, will you walk with me, I have something to say to you."

She was too much agitated to speak, but she passed the gate.

"In the first place I must tell you that I correspond with Aggie Austin, and she has told me who you are. I can't plead ignorance as an excuse for my madness, and yet I must give way to it so far as to tell you. I love you with my whole heart—I, a penniless man! You are silent; it is my most merciful answer. Well, I will only say farewell. We shall never meet again. God bless you!"

He wrung her hand and turned to leave her, his face ashy gray in the starlight, despair in his strong manly heart.

As he walked away Lela found voice and called after him faintly:

"Mr. Studley, I——"

"What!"

Joy was in the tone though no other word was uttered. And what joy was in his face when she held out her hands to him, saying fondly:

"You cannot love me half so well as I love you, for I am not worthy of such love."

When Mrs. Malcom was introduced to Lela's husband she was satisfied, and rejoiced that no greater harm had come of Lela's summer spent at the old red farmhouse.—[Philadelphia Call.

GEN. G. B. McCLELLAN DEAD.

Death Very Sudden—His Career in Military and Civic Life.

ORANGE, N. J., Oct. 20.—Early this morning Gen. Geo. B. McClellan died of neuralgia of the heart at St. Cloud, his home on Orange Mountain, where he had lived about 20 years. When the General returned about a month ago from his trip to California with his family, he was to all appearances in robust health. He lived his usual quiet life in his breezy country seat, visited the city occasionally, and the people of Orange often saw the sturdy, gray-moustached veteran in his carriage on the drives around the city. His son, Max McClellan, had gone back to his college work at Princeton, and his wife and daughter were enjoying the social pleasures of the mountain, previous to their removal to New York for the winter. This change usually occurred shortly before Thanksgiving.

About three weeks ago the general was seized with sharp neuralgic pains in his left side. His physician, Dr. John S. Leonard of Orange, was called in and pronounced it a case of neuralgia affecting the heart. The General was prescribed for and the pain did not recur. There was little anticipation of anything serious at the time, and yesterday afternoon the General enjoyed his customary drive in the town and showed no symptoms of illness. After dinner Mrs. McClellan called at the house of a neighbor, and the General sat in the drawing room talking with his daughter. At 10:45 o'clock General McClellan started to go up stairs to bed. Immediately afterward he was heard groaning on the stairs. He had been attacked by an acute and violent pain and a feeling of oppression in the breast, and was for the time unable to move. The servants assisted him up stairs, and Doctor Seward was summoned by telephone. The physician arrived at 11 o'clock and remained with the General during the rest of the night. The remedies administered soon alleviated the General's sufferings, but at 2 o'clock he again complained of intense pain across the chest. At 3 o'clock after an interval of unconsciousness, he turned to the doctor and said: "I feel more comfortable now."

These were his last words. He relapsed into unconsciousness and died at 3:10 a. m.

There were with him at his death his wife, his daughter and Dr. Seward. The death was so sudden and unexpected, and the family so prostrated under the blow, that no preparations or plans for the funeral ceremonies have been considered. None of the friends of the family have as yet arrived at the house. Telegrams were sent this morning to General McClellan's son and the General's numerous friends. General McClellan's mother is his only parent now living.

George B. McClellan was of Scotch decent, and was born in Philadelphia, December 3, 1826. He was graduated from West Point, 1846, was commissioned second lieutenant of Engineers, served in the Mexican war of 1846-8, and greatly distinguished himself at the battles of Courtreras, Churubusco, Molino del Rey and Chapultepec, receiving the brevet rank of captain. After the Mexican war he returned to West Point, remaining there till 1851, and introduced the bayonet exercise there. He was employed for the next three years in engineering and exploring duties at Fort Delaware, in the Red river and Pacific railroad expeditions, and in the survey of the Texas rivers; In 1855 was promoted to captain of cavalry, and soon after sent with Robert E. Lee to observe the war in Crimea. His report on the "Organization of European Armies and the Operations of War" enhanced his reputation. He resigned his commission in 1857, and was successively vice president of the Illinois Central railroad, and president of the Ohio and Mississippi railway. At the breaking out of the war in April, 1861, the ex-captain of cavalry was called by Governor Dennison of Ohio to aid him in organizing his volunteer regiments and commissioned as major-general of volunteers. [illegible] the Battle of Bull Run, he was called to command the division of the Potomac, July 27, 1861; the department of the Potomac, August 17, 1861, and the army of the Potomac, August 20, 1861. He succeeded Gen. Winfield Scott as general-in-chief of the armies of the United States, November 1, 1861; but on March 11, 1862 was superseded by General Halleck, though he continued in command of the army of the Potomac. He had assembled a magnificent army, but was unwilling to move forward with it. He made an advance on Manassas March, 6, but the enemy had already abandoned it. Returning, he led his command to Fortress Monroe, beseiging Yorktown, which it is said, he could easily have carried by assault; the advance of his force was defeated at Williamsburg, and fought a drawn battle at West Point, Virginia. After battles at Fair Oaks, Seven Pines, and at Gaines's Mills, in none of which he comanded in person, he determined upon a change of base to the James river, and during the next seven days several severe battles, with varying fortune, none of them directed by him, were fought. It was too late to take Richmond by this route, and his army was ordered back to the vicinity of Washington, to reinforce Pope, who was at this time retreating towards Washington, confronted by a superior force, and General McClellan was for a few days without any distinct command. After the battles near Washington, August 30.—September 1, 1861, General McClellan reorganized the Union army, followed General Lee into Maryland, defeated a part of his force at South Mountain, September 14, and fought a drawn battle at Antietam Creek, September 17, but did not pursue Lee into Virginia again. He was relieved of his command on the 5th of November, 1862. He remained most of the time for the next two years in New York city, or at his country seat here, taking no active part in public affairs. On August 31, 1864, he was nominated by the Democratic national convention its candidate for the presidency, on a peace platform, George H. Pendleton, of Ohio, an avowed friend of the Secessionists, being a candidate for vice-president. At the election in November, 1864, Messrs. McClellan and Pendleton were defeated, receiving but twenty-one electoral votes out of 234 cast. On November 8 he resigned his commission as major-general of the United States army, and in the following spring sailed for Europe, where he remained until 1868. After his return he was made superintendent of the completion of Edward A. Stevens's great floating battery. General McClellan published, besides his report of Observations in the Crimea, already mentioned, "A Report of his Military Campaigns," a "Treatise on Bayonet exercises," and a "Report on the New York Piers and Docks."

[illegible] engineer of the Illinois Central railroad. In 1860 he became president of the St. Louis & Cincinnati railroad and remained in this position until the opening of the rebellion. He entered the service as a Major-General in the volunteer force of Ohio. His great military abilities were soon recognized by President Lincoln who appointed him a Major-General in the regular army. After the battle of Bull Run Gen. McClellan was put in command of the Army of the Potomac, and a few months later he was appointed to succeed Gen. Scott as the commander of all the armies of the United States. He was then but thirty five years of age. At his own request he was soon relieved of this office and at once commenced to reorganize the Army of the Potomac. Here he attained his great reputation as an organizer. His campaign in the peninsula of Virginia was very unsuccessful and he was subject to severe criticisms. However he displayed wonderful engineering skill, strategetic capacity and powers of disciplinship. The great fault seemed to be in his dilatoriness of attack. When the rebels invaded Maryland McClellan was given command of the forces in and about Washington where considerable alarm was felt. Gen. McClellan received universal praise for his leadership in the battle of Antietam. Gen. Burnside superseded him in the command of the Army of the Potomac and he then retired from active service. No commander was more dearly loved by his men than was McClellan. He was always thoughtful as to their comforts.

He was nominated by the Democrats for President in 1864, against Abraham Lincoln, with a platform which declared the war for the union a failure. In 1878 he was elected by the Democrats as governor of New Jersey in which office he made many admirers. Gen. McClellan was a man of noble character and high ideas. His sudden death is a severe blow to his many friends throughout the country. The heroes of the late war are fast passing from our midst.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY COON has tendered his resignation to take effect upon the qualification of his successor.

THE yacht Genesta crossed the Atlantic from New York to Portsmouth in the exceedingly fast time of twenty days and ten hours. It is believed that the trip beats the record.

FERDINAND WARD'S trial is at last at an end and the little financier who figured so conspicuously in Wall street, entered upon a ten year's term at hard labor in Sing Sing prison last Saturday. Ward did not appear effected when sentence was pronounced. Many believe that he has large sums of money stored safely away. The next likely man to follow Fish and Ward is William S. Warner, whose trial is now going on.

The Case of Riel.

The existence of the Canadian Dominion may hang upon so small a thing as the decision of its Government with regard to one man's life.

The execution of Riel will inevitably stimulate the disruptive tendencies which already make the maintenance of union between the French and English sections of Canada extremely difficult. The French element of the population will look on Riel as a martyr, and so in one sense he would be, for there would have been no second rebellion for him to head but for the administrative maltreatment of the French-speaking half breeds in the Northwest.

That from this point of view Riel may be fairly regarded as a victim of the Governments own wrongdoing, will be clear by and by even to the Orangemen of Ontario, who just now are clamoring for his death. It will be clear, for they will see the present Ministry virtually admit responsibility for the late outbreak by proposing legislative remedies for the grievances of which the half breeds complained and which Riel strove to redress. When the hour comes for confessing the provocation given to the revolt, the present Premier will be lucky if he does not find himself at once deserted by the English and detested by the French.

The state board of health has urged the abatement of bone boiling, fat and offal rendering, and phosphate factories on Long Island. Its bulletin for September shows that the death rate is larger where this class of nuisances abound.

In Jamestown, Wednesday night, natural gas was burned from several tall stand pipes in the streets, making a roar that could be heard over half the city. It took the vapor 30 minutes to come there from wells at Ludlow, 30 miles away. The Pennsylvania Gas company owns the plant, and has invested over $500,000. A number of Standard Oil company men are heavily interested in the speculation. There are 40 miles of pipes in the streets, and the manufacturing interests are expecting to receive a decided boom from the use of the cheap fuel.

Last week a farmer living near Phoenix went to the village with a load of wood, which he sold to Dr. Conger. In driving into the barn to unload, he stooped down, but not enough to clear himself and was caught between the wood and the upper casing of the door and was badly injured. He was taken home and Dr. Drury called. The doctor reports him improving.

Cheese Market.

AT UTICA Nov. 2.

The market to-day has been about as dull as any day this season. For a long time no offers could be heard of, the report being only that prices would be ⅛c. off from last week's. This was at length modified to ⅜c. off, and some very fair sales, considering the general condition of the market, were made just before six o'clock. A few salesmen who had Septembers on hand, refused to part with them, although we hear that one of them was offered 10c. Most of the cheese sold was of the early October make. The factories in the northern part of the county mostly closed last Saturday. Some other small factories in other parts have closed, but the larger ones will run till from the middle of this month to the middle of next. All are now skimming the night's milk. Transactions of the day are as follows: 60 boxes at 8¾c.; 4 lots, 400 boxes, at 9c.; 37 lots, 3,309 boxes, at 9¼c.; 2 lots, 180 boxes, at 9⅜c.; 20 lots, 1,781 boxes, at 9½c.; 140 at 9⅝c.; 4 lots, 243 boxes, at 9¾c.; 2 lots, 200 boxes, at 9⅞c.; 1 lot of Septembers and Octobers, 660 boxes at 10½c. Sales, 7,113 boxes; commissions, 615 boxes. Total, 7,728 boxes. Ruling price, 9¼c. Transactions corresponding day last year 6,411 boxes, [illegible], ruling two years ago 6,377 boxes, 11c. ruling.

LITTLE FALLS, Nov. 2.

Buyers came upon the market to-day, showing no desire to handle stock at scarcely any price. They reported an almost total absence of orders and a heavy decline in price from last week, stating the limit to be 9⅝c. This was not at all satisfactory to the salesmen, who quite generally refused to sell. Being election week, some have tried to lay the blame upon this fact but the more general and correct view appears to be that there is very little demand for stock. Up to this time dairymen have felt quite confident that the season's trade would close up in much better shape than the average trade of the season; but all are now much disappointed at the unfavorable outlook. Sales are very light and are as follows:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price
8	152	9¼cts
19	1,198	9½cts
3	309	9⅝cts
1	30	10 cts

[illegible] whose business was trivial [illegible]. Applicants for little [illegible] have gone to the White House on the days when audiences were granted to visitors, and on gaining access to the President, have button-holed him, and poured into his ears their long stories. A friend asked Mr. Cleveland why he allowed his valuable time to be engrossed by such minor matters. "I do not know," he replied, "I do not remember half these people say to me." The nuisance has grown alarmingly in the past few weeks, the crowd of callers growing larger every day. In view of the onerous business he must transact before the meeting of Congress, together with his, as yet untouched message, which must be ready for Congress, the President has felt compelled to institute a reform.

After the first day of November he will grant no interviews to those seeking office or to their advocates. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays of that month, from 10 to 11 o'clock in the morning, he will receive such other persons as call on strictly public business. On the same days at 1:30 in the afternoon he will meet those who merely desire to shake hands with him. On all other days and times during the month he will receive only Cabinet Officers and Chiefs of Bureaus. The President takes the position that, while those seeking public offices seem very numerous when massed in Washington, they are but a very small portion of the American people. He says that the greater part of the people whose agent he is are those whose interests in the Government are entirely disconnected from office holding.

The probable complexion of the reorganized Civil Service Commission, is now a subject of speculation. It has been suggested that if Mr. Coon should be appointed as a Republican, Professor Smart of Indiana, as a Democrat and educator, with a practical turn, and a southern Democrat and lawyer be the third man, a fairly satisfactory commission might be evolved. Judge Thoman's resignation, which was accepted without any effusion on the part of the President, is to take effect at once. As Mr. Eaton's place also becomes vacant in a few days and as Dr. Gregory will also leave the office, the commission has to be re-organized at an early date. It has been said that the President will have difficulty in getting these positions, which are among the most honorable in the public service, filled; but such a statement is probably born of a desire to see the failure of the commission.

The chief point of interest in the Capitol during the winter will be the Senate. It is predicted by Republicans that there will be as much friction between Democratic Senators and the President as between the President and the Republicans. It is true that many of the Democratic Senators do not agree with Mr. Cleveland in matters of policy, but how wide or how narrow their differences may become is a question which only the future can determine. The Republican senators will be largely guided in their course towards the Administration by the results in the Virginia and New York elections. If both of them go against the Administration, it will naturally make them more aggressive. The Republicans are saying that the fight of the Democratic factions in Congress will relieve them from the necessity of doing anything in the way of amusement. Congressman O'Neill, of St. Louis, is spoken of as the man who is expected to furnish fun for the Forty-ninth Congress. But as he spends but little time on the floor of the House, he will not fill the vacancies left by Cox, who has gone to Turkey, and by Horr of Michigan, and Belford of Colorado, who are politically no more. Tom Corwin, Thaddeus Stevens, and Senator Nesmith were some of the old humorists who have enlivened many a day at the Capitol. But new men are coming to the new Congress, and as each session in the past has been provided with funny men, no fears need be felt but that the future will take care of that need.

On every Sunday morning, large crowds still gather at the so-called President's church, attracted by curiosity to see the Chief Magistrate at his devotions. The last sermon they heard there was a severely practical one, directed against the various forms of agnosticism that stands in the way of Christian progress.

The Riverside worsted factory, Quebec, has been obliged to dispose of its stock by auction and close its doors, owing to the lack of a market for its goods in Canada. Two hundred operators are thrown out of employment, and there is an apparent loss of a quarter of a million dollars of private capital.

Several members of William H. Seward post, No, 37, G. A. R., of Auburn, N. Y., accompanied by their ladies, called on the President, Wednesday, on their return from Richmond, Va. Afterwards the veterans inspected the house which was occupied by William H. Seward when he was secretary of state.

All reports to the effect that Mrs. Sartoris had applied or contemplates applying for a divorce or separation from her husband are authoritatively stated entirely without foundation.

Queen Victoria, replying to the memorial of the Peace Society, praying for a commutation of the death sentence passed upon Riel, says she is unable to interfere in the case without first consulting her responsible advisers. A NEW STOVE. ON A NEW PRINCIPLE.

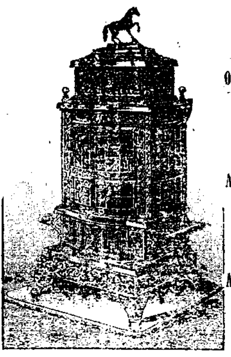
A HANDSOME STOVE. AN EXCELLENT HEATER.

AN ECONOMICAL STOVE. A PERFECT VENTILATOR.



☞A good Base Burner of any kind will heat a room, but it also destroys and burns up the life principle of the air. Foul air if hot will not keep a person warm. The Howe Ventilating Stove warms the room and keeps the air pure. It Ventilates the room at the same time that it heats it. Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

After this the visitors were escorted to Wormuth's Hall, where a bounteous collation was boldly attacked and a splendid victory won. When the soldiers came to rest on their laurels, order was called by Commander Scovill, and Comrade J. V. Kendall was ordered to take matters in hand for the "feast of reason and the flow of soul." Various sentiments were announced suitable to the occasion, which were replied to by comrades and others as fellows: "Welcome to Post Schenck," J. M. Scoville, Post Moses Summers; reply H. A. Harris, Post Schenck; "Our Friends—the Clergy," Rev. W. Beauchamp of Baldwinsville; "The Commissary Department—How are Soldiers Fed in the Army," Comrade G. Ward, Post Schenck; "My Country 'Tis of Thee," by the Fulton band; "The Artillery Arm of the Service; Comrade D. M. Perine, Post Schenck; "General Grant" received in silence, the audience standing with uncovered heads; "General Sherman," by the Fulton band, with "Marching through Georgia;" "The Charge on the Enemy's lines, Comrade Palmer, Post Schenck; "The Bummer," Comrade John Barclay, Post Moses Summers; "Saw Bones in the Army," Surgeon D. Pardee, Post Schenck; "The Picket Post," Past Commander Pentelow, Post Schenck; "What Did You Enlist For?" Comrade M. Crahan, Post Schenck; "The Ladies," Comrade G. V. Emens, Post Schenck. Before closing the exercises, Comrade Sheldon of Post Summers, in a pleasant patriotic speech, presented a monumental cake, from Mrs. Kendall, to the Commander of Post Schenck. The pleasures of the repast were heightened by the devoted service of a score or so of young ladies who volunteered to serve the tables, and the after-pleasures were greatly enhanced by some fine singing by the Quartette club of Fulton.—[Baldwinsville Cor. to Standard.

The Benefit Concert.

Next Friday evening, Nov. 6, occurs the concert in Stephens opera house for the benefit of Fred Kenyon, the blind musician. The best local talent has been secured and it is safe to say that an entertainment of rare merit will be given. Already a large number of tickets have been sold and indications promise as large an audience as ever gathered in the opera house. Go and enjoy the concert and help along the cause.

The Man Who Became Dumb.

One day last week as one of our citizens was hurrying through the streets, his attention was attracted by the strange conduct of a man who seemed to be wandering up and down in a dazed manner. Thinking perhaps to help him if he was in trouble of any kind, he began to question him on almost every subject he thought would trouble him, but he was silent. At last on reaching Oneida street, he seemed to arouse somewhat, and hasten his steps until they reached the store formerly occupied by E. Delaney, but now in possession of William Sylvester. Ah! this, then, was the secret of his being so dumb. He had heard of the place where he could obtain so much for a little money in the line of groceries, tea, coffee and spices, and he was dumb to everything else; but now he waxed eloquent over the great sale which is to occur on Saturday of this week; of the great bargains then to be offered in stand and hanging lamps, silverware, etc. Any-one doubting this statement are invited to come and see for themselves. Don't forget the time and place. On Saturday, Nov. 7 on Oneida street, in the Dexter block store. Bargains are offered.

Teachers' Institute.

I will be again at the store of F. E. Bacon on Tuesday, Nov. 10 for the purpose of making further arrangements for the entertainment of teachers at the coming Institute. I hope any who can do so will aid in this matter as the number attending will be larger than usual. The teachers of course will pay usual rates for such entertainment. Names of those who will take teachers with the number they can take, may be left at Mr. Bacon's store or with any of the teachers in the schools.

Don't forget Rosenbloom's special sale of cottons on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Messrs. Smith & Porter, of this village have opened a new meat market on Cayuga street, adjoining Richardson's grocery.

A very pleasant party was given last Friday evening by Miss Lillie Lake at her home on Oneida street, to a number her young friends.

Mr. H. Baldry has purchased the Edick house, corner of Oneida and Fourth streets and will take possession at once. Considerations $3,500.

The first annual ball given by the Hook and Ladder company last Wednesday evening in the opera house hall, was largely attended, and netted the boys a good round sum.

It is said that the water will be let into the pipes in about three weeks. The reservoir is not finished and the water will be forced directly from the well to the mains.

A man by the name of Roberts, while engaged in unloading a canal boat yesterday, was struck on the head by a pulley block, and severely cut. Dr. Lee dressed the wound.

Among the many bridal presents received by Mrs. Genevieve Marvin, nee Loomis, was a handsome brass clock from friends in Virginia. It has a cathedral gong and is very elaborately mounted and finished.

George Yeomans was arrested last Sunday morning about half past two o'clock for being drunk and creating a disturbance near the corner of First street and Broadway. He was tried before a jury Monday evening and found guilty. He was sentenced to six months in the Onondaga penitentiary, and was taken there yesterday morning by Officer Hulett.

Cornelius Dunn of this village, was arrested last Friday afternoon by United States deputy marshall Geo. Wood and taken to Oswego before U. S. commissioner Getty, on a charge of selling liquor without a government license. The offense is alleged to have been committed last September when the defendant sold liquor from a stand outside the Oswego Falls fair grounds. Dunn plead-ed not guilty and was held to bail in the sum of $500, for his appearance for examination November 12.

A Times reporter visited the rooms of company No.1 of the Fire department yesterday and was struck by the really elegant manner in which they had been fitted up. The rooms have been handsomely papered and newly carpeted, and with the easy cushioned seats present as comfortable and elegant an appearance as can be found in this section of the state. The sitting room has also been elegantly fitted up and is separated from the main room by a wide door hung with heavy curtains. The boys may well be proud of their handsome apartments.

A number of citizens of South Hannibal visited the insane asylum and poor house at Mexico a short time ago, and through the courtsey of the superintendant, Mr. H. V. Spencer and his assistants, Mr. W. V. Lund and wife and Mr. Lansing and wife, were shown through the buildings and grounds. There are 118 inmates and the work is mostly done by them. Every thing was as clean as soap and water could make it and the best of order prevailed everywhere. They were treated to a bountiful dinner presided over by Mr. and Mrs. Lansing, to which they did ample justice and which made them feel that the poor house was not so bad a place to live after all.

Dicken's Party.

The first regular meeting of the amusement club for the season, was held at the residence of Mrs. T. D. Lewis last Wednesday evening, and was a most successful and brilliant event. Nearly all the members were present and appeared in costumes, assuming characters from Dickens. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Giles Piper, Mr. and Mrs. John Case, Mr. and Mrs. William Morton, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Emerick, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Mead, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gage, Mrs. Carrie Leonard, Mrs. Edward French, the Misses Willard, Miss Nelson, Miss Johnson, Miss Eva Case, Miss Allie Case, Miss May French, Miss Thayer, Miss Dada, Miss Stephens, Miss Frank French, Miss Grace Tucker, Miss Jennings, Lovell Johnson, Howard Case, William Lovejoy, John Bacchus, C. M. Allen, Miss Georgie Lovejoy, Frank Willard, Edward Wolcott, Mrs. George M. Case, Solan Case, John Hadcock. Some of the most conspicious characters were "Micawber and wife," "Jingle," "Mr. Pickwick," "Captain Cuttle," "Agnes Wakefield," "Mrs. Betsey Trotwood," "The Fat Boy," "Little Dorrit," "Dolly Varden," "Mrs. Murdstone," "Peggorty," "Winkle," "Mrs. Bardell," "Sam Wellers," "Mr. Pecksniff and daughter, Miss Picksniff," "Mrs. Squeers," "Serjeant Buzfuz," "Mrs. Cluppins," "Serjeant Snubbin," and "Mrs. Jellyby." There were many other characters taken which were perhaps not so prominent, but nevertheless did exceedingly well. The "Pickwick trial" was an interesting feature of the evening's entertainment, evoking much laughter and merriment. The judge, lawyers, jury, and witnesses recited their parts verbatim. Many of the costumes worn on the occasion were very elaborate and of striking resemblance to the original characters, as described in the works. Two or three of the ladies present appeared in dresses over one hundred years old. The spacious parlors, filled with so varied a concourse of people, dancing and talking, amid inspiring music from "David the pianist," of Syracuse, made the scene a very pretty one. The club will hold meetings every two weeks during the winter at the homes of different members. Rich enjoyment is in store for all.

The club held a business meeting last evening and elected six new members. The next meeting will be held at Miss Georgie Lovejoy's.

The Last of the Season.

Candidate Davenport has a forehead like a poet. This will not commend him to the editorial fraternity if he should take it into his head to send in an effusion on "Autumn Leaves."

The suggestion about Autumn leaves, however, is a good one, for it implies that Winter comes; and that reminds us that Overcoats are in demand. They can be obtained at Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street. This is plain prose.

The anomaly that the Goddess of Liberty will stand high in New York, notwithstanding her position on Bedlow, is something like the clothing—overcoats and suits for men, youths and boys—at Kent & Miller's. It stands high in public estimation, but it can be bought very low. Call and see the winter stock. It is unsurpassed for variety and excellence.

Several hundred Men's and Boys' Scotch Caps just received by D. C. More & Co. These caps were manufactured to our order. They are first-class goods and will be sold Very Low.

Mrs. John Sheridan has just completed another painting on plush. The design is a piece of grape vine with large luscious looking clusters of grapes hanging forth. It is one of the artists best efforts on plush.

Carpenter & Crahan of Oswego Falls are entitled to much credit for their work in papering and painting the rooms of Company No.1 of the Fire department. This enterprising firm will occupy a portion of the Emeny block when completed.

Miaco's Humpty Dumpty and specialty company appeared last Friday and Saturday evenings in Stephen's opera house to small but appreciative audiences. The pantomime was excellent and kept the house in a roar of laughter. The specialty business was first-class. Prof. Kane's wonderful balancing feats elicited hearty applause.

The tenth year of the Fulton Reading circle was inaugurated a few evenings since at the residence of Mrs. Edward French. The attendance was large and interest in the season's plans spirited. The officers chosen were: President, Rev. C. H. Smith; Vice-President, Rev. Mr. Breaker; Secretary, Miss Ellen Emerick. The work assigned for the winter includes the study of Longfellow, mediæval literature with original essays and appropriate selections.

For some time past a young man has been stationed on Oneida street near Sholtz's barber shop, engaged in selling a machine to cut bread, meat, etc. T. S. Brady, of this village, bought the right for the town of Volney, paying $25 for the same. He then telegraphed to a firm in Newark, N. J., who was said to make the machines, to send on his goods. In reply he was informed that they did not manufacture the article. Meanwhile the young man who sold Brady the right had disappeared, taking his machine with him. It looks very much like a clever piece of swindling. He is said to have victimized parties in Oswego and Mexico.

[illegible] There was a great falling off in the Republican vote on the head of the ticket as compared with last fall. Blaine's majority in this election district was 131, while Davenport's majority is 2. The vote was short on the total number 65. The local fight on the assembly candidates was bitter. It will be seen that Mr. Howe's majority in this town is exactly the same as last year. The following is a summary of the vote in the town of Volney:

Oswego gives Davenport a majority of about 2,500. A Republican Senator and Assemblymen in the two districts are elected.

Sandy Creek, Oswego county, gives [illegible]

State to hear from. These districts are Republican strongholds and may change the result. The New York Tribune claims both branches of the Legislature but concedes Gov. Hill's election. The Times places Hill's plurality at 15,000. The Sun says it is between 18,000 and 20,000. The Times makes the composition of the Legislature: Senate, Republican 21, Democrats 11; Assembly, Republican 76, Democrats 52; Republican majority on a joint ballot 34.

He made his levy on one cow and some calves and went to one of the neighbors to write some notices for the sale. When he returned, he found that the stock was locked and he could not get them. Danish butter makers feed wheat, bran, oats, and rye as first class butter foods, with barley next, followed by rye, peas and linseed cake.

Rye may be sown at any time through October and November for cutting green for early in the spring. Three bushels of seed should be used to the acre for this purpose.

Whenever the no-fence law has been introduced it has saved hundreds of dollars to the farmers. Formerly the farmer who had but few animals was compelled to build as much fence as the one who raised large numbers: but under the no-fence system crops may be grown without the necessity of inclosing them.

To cure a horse of stumbling, which is caused by dragging the fore feet too low and catching the toe, the toe should be shortened and no toe calks used. A bracelet of wooden balls strung upon a strap should be worn around the leg above the lowest joint. This causes the horse to throw the feet out a little and so lift them up more. A stumbling horse should be driven with a tight check rein, if he is given to the habit of carrying the head low and bearing forward in the harness.

Have you a Barn Sheet?—This is one of those useful and inexpensive things that ought to be met on every farm, but is too seldom found. When loading such grain as buckwheat, or even oats, that is liable to shell, by spreading the barn cloth over the wagon bottom, enough grain may be saved to make next season's seed. It is also useful to spread over a load of grain or fodder caught out in a shower, over an unfinished stack, threshing or other machines, or over bags of grain temporarily exposed to driving rain. When not in use in some such ways it may serve to protect the carriage from dust. In fact the uses that a barn-cloth may be made to serve are almost innumerable. About sixteen yards of strong, wide sheeting will make a good sized sheet. This will allow for four widths each four yards long. The seams should be sewed with linen thread; a strong cord should be cound in a hem at the edge.

How many people say: "your plaster beats everything I ever tried." The Hop Plaster really cures Backache, Stitch, Sciatica, Lame Side or Hip, or pains in any part. The best porous plaster known. 25c.

THE PROPER THING.

The stylish vest of the season laces up in front.

Amber is a fashionable English craze at present.

Redingotes and pelisses have large collars or hoods.

Tulle veils are preferred to those of lace for young brides.

Chenille dots are on the long wrists of undressed kid gloves.

Very large shopping bags of velvet plush or satin are popular.

China crape with velvet and beaded tulle makes charming bridesmaid's dresses.

Bright scarlet crape is one of the latest novelties for a dressy capote bonnet.

The travelling dress for a bride is made of cloth and velvet with a soft bonnet of the cloth.

Immense ruches, pleated very full, are revived for finishing the bottom of dress skirts.

The high crowned hats, with the brim much wider in front than behind, are most popular.

A dressy corsage for autumn wear is of black velvet, open over a narrow waist-coat of cardinal satin.

Tan-colored gloves remain in style for wearing with any dress, but pearl and gray will be much worn.

Undressed white kid gloves long enough to cover the arm below the elbow sleeves are worn by brides.

A bias fold, of white corduroy is the latest novelty worn inside the neck and sleeves of winter dresses.

The bang at the nape of the neck is out of fashion but the back hair is crimped before it is carried up to the crown of the head and coiled.

A new shade of "swallow blue," very rich and handsome in effect, is shown among fabrics of Ottoman, satin brocades, and broche goods.

Silver tinsel threads woven in white satin, in plumes or peacock feathers, is the fabric for the corsage and train of costly wedding dresses.

Velvet ribbon tied in a small bow on the left side or in front is worn around the neck above the linen collar. The color may match the dress or be in contrast with it.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

W. W. Reed, druggist of Winchester, Ind., writes: "One of my customers, Mrs. Louisa Pike, Bartonia, Randolph Co., Ind., was a long sufferer with Consumption, and was given up to die by her physicians. She heard of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and began buying it of me. In six month's time she walked to this city, a distance of six miles, and is now so much improved she has quit using it. She feels she owes her life to it." Free Trial Bottles at R. E. "Overboard."

The bank of clouds creeping up from the west makes the night blacker, and the rising wind sweeps through the rigging in a way to produce the strangest sounds. A landsman would be frightened at the rattle and clatter and sighs and groans heard aloft. The creaking and moaning as the vessel lifts herself over a sea and rushes down the slope of a second would make a coward of him. He would believe that every plank in her hull was drawing away from the frame to let in torrents of water. He would be unnerved at the thought of a struggle with those angry white-topped waters.

The sailor in his bunk in the forecastle is lulled to sleep by the roar of the storm. The groans and shrieks are familiar sounds to his ears. The mad pitching of the storm-tossed vessel may not even bring him strange dreams.

Off to the west the clouds keep banking up, and one by one the stars are blotted out. The farmer, safe on dry land, would look out into the night from his door and whispers; "Heaven help those abroad on the waters this night!"

On board the schooner racing down the angry lake—the great lake of Michigan—the waves following faster each moment, and the hiss seems changing to an angry roar. The summer gale is growing into a howling, raving, crashing storm, and the hand of man must meet and thwart it.

"Below, there! On deck all to shorten sail."

The voice fell upon the ears of men sound asleep, but the words had scarcely been uttered when men, wide-awake and full of anxiety, were rushing on deck.

"Reef topsail!"

Stand on the warf some day and look up at the yards of a topsail schooner. Note the dizzy hight at which they stretch their long arms across the mast! Think of climbing to that hight and "laying out" over deck and river with only a swinging foot-rope to rest your body on! A chill creeps over you at the thought. Then think of a howling gale at sea—the mad rush of waters—the wild pitch of the storm-chased vessel—the swaying masts and the black night!

"Reef topsail!"

With sleep still heavy on their eyelids —with minds only half awake to the situation of affairs, three or four men spring into the shrouds and go creeping up. Every foot above the rail adds to the pitch of the schooner, and at the cross-trees the clinging sailor seems to describe a half-circle as the bows sink down and are thrown up. It is a ladder from the rail to the cross-trees. From the cross trees to the groaning, creaking, swaying guard each man must grit his teeth and breath a prayer as he pulls up the ropes.

At the slings of the yard, the men must wait for a moment to catch breath. Up here the gale screams like a mad animal, and the roar of the sea seems like a conflict in which a thousand wolves are rending each other. The heavy sail must be gathered up and the gaskets passed over the yard and knotted firmly. One man must pass out to the extreme point of the yard to the earring. Astride of the yard, the roll of the ship causing him to describe a fearful half-circle, he must forget the death below and use all his muscle.

A screaming, shrieking gust of wind catches the half-rolled sail and tears it from the fingers of the sailor. It is so sudden that the man at the earring fails to let go his grip, and the next instant a wild cry of fear echoes above the shriek of the gale, and a black mass is pitched from that dizzy hight far out into the boiling water.

What use to cry: "Man overboard!" A thousand brave-hearted, willing-handed men on the deck below could not save him.

Down into the seething, boiling, hissing waters—down past crest and foam—down until it seems as if his feet must touch the bottom of the lake, and then comes the turn and he ascends. Up-up-up—his lungs burning, his ears roaring, and at last he springs above the foam and is saved. Saved! What mockery! He thanks Heaven as he draws in a long breath. What sarcasm! He makes ready to battle for his life. How utterly hopeless! the schooner is already half a mile away, and the nearest shore is twenty miles distant.

On the gravelly beach, with the still half-angry waters at times running over it, lies the body of a sailor. There is a look of hopeless despair on the ghastly face, and the fingers are clutched as if to strike a return blow at death. He was homeless, houseless, friendless. Nobody will inquire for him. Nobody will miss him. At the first port of call the vessel will report his loss, and the daily journals will briefly say:

"Drowned—On her trip up last week the Durand lost a man overboard off Lexington."

That is all. You see the notices every day. There is a burial on the sandy shore—this is the eulogy—the epitaph.—[M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.

What a Woman Can Do.

There are lots of things that a woman can do that a man cannot. A woman can hold more clothes pins in her mouth and look through a knot hole at the same time. She can come to a conclusion without the slightest trouble of reasoning on it, and no sane man can do that. She can safely stick fifty pins in her dress while he is getting one under the thumb nail. She can button her shoes standing up, with both feet on the floor, but he can't. She is as cool as a cucumber in half a dozen tight dresses and skirt, while a man will sweat and fume and growl in one loose shirt. She can talk as sweet as peaches and cream to a woman she hates, while two men would be punching each other's heads before they had exchanged ten words. She can throw a stone with a curve that would be a fortune to a base-ball pitcher. She can say "No," and stick to it for a time. She can also say "No" in such a low voice that it means "Yes." She can pass a display window of a dry goods store without stopping, if she is running to catch a train. She can dance all night in a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her, and enjoy every minute of the time. She can sharpen a lead pencil, if you give her plenty of time and plenty of pencils. She can appreciate a kiss from her husband seventy-five years after the marriage ceremony is performed. She can go to church, and afterward tell you what every woman in the congregation had on, and, in some rare instances, can give you a faint idea of what the text was. She can walk half the night with a collicky baby in her arms, without once expressing the desire to murder the infant. She can go to the theatre every evening and the matinee on Wednesday and Saturday, and still possess strength to attend a Sunday evening sacred concert. She can—but what's the use? A woman can do anything or everything, and do it well. She can do more in a minute than a man can in an hour, and do it better. She can make the alleged lords of creation bow down to her own sweet will, and they will never know it. She can drive a man crazy for twenty-four hours, and bring him to paradise in two seconds, by simply tickling him under the chin, and there does not live that mortal son of Adam's misery who can do it.

AFTER DIPHTHERIA.

Diphtheria is a terrible disease, requiring the greatest medical skill to effect a complete cure. Even when its power is broken, it clings to the patient with great persistency, and often leaves the system poisoned and prostrated. Just here Hood's Sarsaparilla does a vast amount of good, expelling impurities from the blood, giving it richness and vitality, while it renovates and strengthens the system.

A Cincinnati husband who threatened to cut his wife's heart out and carry it around on a shingle got off with a fine of $5.

NEVER GIVE UP.

Strength for To-Day.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow ;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day,
With measures of joy and sorrow.

Then why forecast the trials of life,
With much sad and grave persistence,
And wait and watch for a crowd of ills
That as yet have no existence ?

Strength for to-day—what a precious boon
For earnest souls who labor ?
For the willing hands that minister
To the needy friend or neighbor.

Strength for to-day that the weary hearts
In the battle for right may quail not ;
And the eyes bedimmed by bitter tears
In their search for light may fail not.

Strength for to-day on the down-hill track
For the travelers near the valley ;
That up, far up on the other side
Ere long they may safely rally.

Strength for to-day, that our precious youth
May happily shun temptation,
And build from the rise to the set of the sun
On a strong and sure foundation.

Strength for to-day, in house and home
To practice forbearance sweetly ;
To scatter kind words and loving deeds,
Still trusting in God completely.

Strength for to day is all that we need,
And there never will be a to-morrow ;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day
With its measure of joy and sorrow

MILICENT'S PUPIL.

What a summer that was at Scalp Level, when we all had the art fever, and organized our sketching club!

Despite our lofty aspirations, it was a very jolly affair, and we managed to have a good time generally. But one afternoon stands out with peculiar distinctness in my memory.

We were off to the woods on a kind of æsthetic picnic, or what Jule called a "sketching jamboree." Our party was a large one, but, though there was always more or less of a scattering out of doors, Milicent Leigh was the only one who had a trick of slipping off by herself in quest of beauties which no one else could discover.

On this particular afternoon she was seated alone on a rustic bridge, making a sketch of a prostrate tree that lay just at the water's edge.

"There!" she murmured, laying down her book. "That's the prettiest thing I've done this season."

The words had scarcely left her lips ere she gave a low cry and started to her feet in alarm.

A cold nose had just been impudently thrust into her face, and the same moment she confronted a big brown dog, whose mate was dashing through the underbrush not fifty yards away.

Milicent stood for a moment in the most abject terror, and her apprehensions were hardly lessened when she saw the owner of the dogs emerge from the brush with a gun over his shoulder.

He had a bushy, brown beard, and with his gray slouch hat pulled over his eyes, he might easily have passed for a villain.

As he caught sight of the dogs he put a silver whistle to his lips and called them.

Still he advanced toward Milicent, and she took a backward step with half a mind to run away.

The same instant she glanced around, and was conscious that her hat was gone.

"Oh!" she exclaimed starting forward again, for she saw it bobbing up and down on the surface of the water.

The owner of the dog saw it, too.

"After it, Czar!" he cried. "Quick, sir! For shame! Don't you know better than to startle a lady so?"

The moment he spoke Milicent breathed more freely, for the tone of his voice was reassuring.

"I am very sorry the dogs frightened you," he said, lifting his hat politely. "They don't understand the courtesies."

Milicent made some faint reply as she watched the big brown setter swim out into the middle of the stream after her hat.

"I hope it's not hurt," said the stranger, anxiously, as he restored it to her.

"I guess not," Milicent answered. "Thanks!"

"I am afraid it will be more thoroughly drenched than it is before you get home," he said. "It is going to rain."

She glanced up at the little patches of sky visible between the trees, and saw that there was a thunderstorm brewing.

"I had not noticed it," she said in dismay.

"Have you far to go?"

"Yes—indeed, I don't know. I have some friends somewhere in the woods."

"That is rather an indefinite location," said the stranger smiling.

"I left them at the waterfall," Milicent explained, beginning to feel that the man was not positively dangerous.

A few big drops splashed down on their faces.

"I wouldn't advise you to go back—there, we are going to have a heavy storm, and you had better go at once to the nearest farmhouse. Allow me."

He drew forth his gossamer coat from his game-bag and threw it around her shoulders.

"I don't know the way," she stammered, making a futile effort to decline his protection.

"If you will come with me—" he began, and then Jule came dashing through the brush crying:

"Miss Milicent! Miss Milicent! I've been hunting for you everywhere. Come! It's going to rain, and they have all gone off to the farmhouse."

Then he stopped in astonishment at the sight of the broad-shouldered stranger and his two dogs.

"I have just been advising the young lady to go there," the gentleman said.

"[illegible] had better go," Milicent [illegible]

Mrs. Pointdexter and the rest of us were already seated on the broad old-fashioned piazza when they came hurrying up out of the rain.

Not being a prey to alarm, we could judge dispassionately of the gentleman's appearance, and all of us thought him decidedly good-looking—in short, quite "sketchable."

"Ask him if he'd mind posing, Mrs. Pointdexter," Mabel Waring said in French, when the stranger had seated himself like the rest of us to wait for the passage of the storm. "Dear knows how long we may have to stay here; and I'm sure he'd make a fine sketch—he and his dogs."

The moment she had spoken she regretted it, for she saw the stranger understood French. He turned with perfect ease of manner, and said:

"I shall be happy to so. Shall I stand or sit?"

Mabel was so confused that she could not answer.

"Sit," Jule replied good-naturedly; "if it is not too much of a bore.

"Not at all," he said glancing toward our chaperon. "I could move mountains in the name of Pointdexter."

"You know the name then?" quired Jule as he set us the example of getting out our pencils and books.

"It is the name of my best friend, Anthon Pointdexter of Boston.

Jule jumped up and grasped the stranger's hand.

"Do you know him?" he cried eagerly.

"As well as myself."

"Mother!" Jule exclaimed turning to Mrs. Pointdexter. "This gentleman is a friend of Anthon's. Are you from Boston, sir?"

The stranger drew out a card and handed it to Jule, and while he was reading the name, "Neil Halleck," and passing it to his mother, the stranger drew forth a letter addressed to himself in a fine scholarly hand.

"I had a letter from Anthon this very morning," he said, handing it to Jule, who read it with much pleasure.

It proved to be in the warmest terms of familiar friendship, and was so strong an evidence of the stranger's good character that he was at once received with open arms.

The posing was forgotten in the cozy chat which ensued.

"Are you going to stay at Scalp Leve all the summer?" Mrs. Pointdexter asked; and when Mr. Halleck assented, she added: "Then, of course, you must join our sketching club. Perhaps you object to dabbling in art? But you must draw a little, or we won't admit you."

"But what if I can't?" Mr. Halleck inquired.

"Miss Leigh will teach you," Jule hastened to say; "she sketches much better than any of the rest of us. Indeed, she is not altogether an amauter, she has had two pictures at the Academy."

Mr. Halleck glanced half quizzically at Milicent's fair face, which was covered with blushes at this praise. It seemed to him that he would rather like to be the pupil of such a preceptress."

"If Miss Leigh would only undertake my tuition," he said humbly; "I suppose a man can be a hunter and an artist, too?"

"You don't look as though you had a very æsthetic temperament," she said, looking up with a laugh, and then down again as she remembered how he had frightened her at first; "but perhaps I can give you some idea of prespective."

"I'm sure you can give me a great many ideas," he said, taking off his hat with so profound a reverence that everyone laughed.

It rained all the afternoon, and we couldn't go out again; but the next morning we started out bright and early and Mr. Halleck went with us.

After that Milicent was not so free to wander off by herself.

She had a pupil who seemed bent on exacting her full time and attention.

It was four weeks after we had had this addition to our club and Mr. Halleck was now a familiar friend.

He was one of the brightest, most congenial spirits I ever met; but alas! it seemed quite impossible for him to draw a straight line.

His trees seemed to be all toppling over, his bridges were bowed, and he had no more perspective in his landscapes than a born Japanese.

"I'm afraid you will never be a Raphael or a Titian, Mr. Halleck," Milicent said one afternoon as she sat looking over some of his recent distortions.

He was lying full length on the grass apparently indifferent to his future, except as it was connected with the girl before him.

Obviously if he was not learning to draw he was learning something else.

Milicent fluttered the leaves of the sketch book, and glanced ruefully at its contents. As she did so a piece of paper fell out on the grass.

Mr. Halleck reached out his hand for it; but Milicent had picked it up and was looking at it in astonishment.

It was a leaf off a water-color tablet, and contained an exquisite little sketch of herself.

"Did you do it?" she asked in surprise.

"Yes—no!" he answered hastily. "Let me see it!"

"No, you can't have it!" she cried holding it high above her head. "It doesn't belong to you, I am sure. You never could have done it. It is perfect in its way; but it's entirely too flattering. Who painted it, Mr. Halleck?"

"I did," he said, snatching the hand that held it. "I painted it under an inspiration. You know, such things happen occasionally. Give it to me, Milicent—I want both the sketch and the [illegible]."

[illegible]

But then Jule's voice was heard near calling:

"Miss Milicent, Miss Milicent! Here—mother said you were to read this right away."

He came up with a letter in his hand, but like a sensible fellow he grasped the situation and left as soon as he had executed his commission.

Mr. Halleck was naturally provoked at the interruption to his wooing.

He looked away with a vexed expression while Milicent glanced over the letter Mrs. Pointdexter had sent her.

It was signed, "Your son, Anthon," and began:

"MY DEAR MOTHER—I have just returned to Boston after a three week's absence at Mount Desert. Hence my delay in answering yours from Scalp Level. I am delighted to learn that you have met Halleck. He is one of the best fellows I know, and is considered by the Boston Society of Artists one of the rising stars of this country. He has exhibited in Paris and London, and carried off a medal in the latter place. The Athenæum says he is destined to found a distinct school of art in America. He is only a beginner as yet, but his first attempts have been uniformly brilliant," and so on over several pages of eulogy.

The letter dropped from Milicent's hand.

"You—deceived us!" she cried in a choking voice. "You allowed me to—to attempt to teach you. "Oh, what a fool I've made of myself!"

She burst into tears of vexation, and covered her face with her hands.

"Don't be angry, darling, he whispered, gathering her in his arms. "I did not mean——"

"Let me go!" she cried passionately; "I cannot endure the sight of you."

His face paled for a instant, and he would have released her, but he changed his mind, and drawing her closely to him, he said gravely:

"Don't be foolish, Milicent. I had no thought of deceiving you at first. It was only when it was suggested that you should teach me that I snatched at an excuse for being always near you. Surely you can forgive such a subterfuge. I love you, Milicent. Tell me that you not angry with me. I cannot bear your displeasure."

For a few minutes Milicent struggled feebly in his arms, but his eloquence quieted her at last.

It was more self-shame than any other feeling that overpowered her.

She had told him that he had not the temperament of an artist; that he never could learn to draw well; that he had no eye for color, etc., etc.

Never once had it entered her head that he was the young Bostonian about whom the art world was in ecstasies.

"Forgive me, darling," he begged.

"What a silly thing you must think me!" she sobbed.

"I think you're an angel!" he answered warmly. "And as for talent, dearest, you have quite as much as I have. It only needs cultivation."

Perhaps this mollified her, for she dried her eyes—or allowed him to—and smiled as she said:

"To think you were making all those absurdly crooked trees on purpose. It's too ridiculous."

He laughed.

"But you haven't told me," said he "Will you marry me, Milicent?"

What she said then is not known; but he must finally have won her consent, for in the Boston papers there appeared the following winter a number of squibs to this effect:

"Mr. Neil Halleck, the distinguished young artist of this city, was married last Wednesday to Miss Milicent Leigh of Pittsburg. It is understood that Mr. Halleck's bride has considerable artistic talent, and the young couple will start on Saturday for Italy, where they propose to study art together.—[Philadel. Call.

How to Test Butter.

There is, says the Scientific American, a qualitative test for butter so simple that any housewife can put it into successful practice. A clean piece of white paper is smeared with a little of the suspected butter. The paper is then rolled up and set on fire. If the butter is pure the smell of the burning paper is rather pleasant; but the odor is distinctly tallowy if the butter is made up wholly or in part of animal fats.

"DROPPED DEAD."

The Fate that Overcame "Little Mac" and five other Governors.

Apropos of the sudden death of Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, we note that the New York Sun, points out the singular fact that Governor DeWitt Clinton, Silas Wright, Governor William L. Marcey, Governor and Chief Justice Sanford E. Chase, and Governor R. E. Fenton, all of New York State, dropped dead of heart disease, and under quite identical circumstances—each of them dying while reading a letter except Marcey, who was perusing Cowper's poems!

Hold your hand against the ribs on your left side, front,—the regular, steady beating of the great "force pump" of the system, run by an unknown and mysterious Engineer, is awful in its impressiveness!

Few persons like to count their own pulse-beats, and fewer persons still enjoy marking the "thub—thub" of their own heart.

"What if it should skip a beat?

As a matter of fact the heart is the least susceptible to primary diseases of any of our vital organs. It is, however, very much injured by certain long continued congestions of the vital organs, like the kidneys, liver and stomach. Moreover blood filled with uric acid produces a rheumatic tendency, and is very injurious to healthful heart action,—it often proves fatal, and, of course, the uric acid comes from impaired kidney action.

"Roberts, the great English authority, says that heart disease is chiefly secondary to some more fatal malady in the blood or their vital organs. That is, it is not the original source of the fatal malady.

The work of the heart is to force blood into every part of the system. If the organs are sound it is an easy task. If they are at all diseased, it is a very, very hard task. Take as an illustration: The kidneys are very subject to congestion and yet, being deficient in the nerves of sensation, this congested condition is not indicated by pain. It may exist for years, unknown even to physicians, and if it does not result in complete destruction of the kidneys, the extra work which is forced upon the heart weakens it every year, and—a "mysterious" sudden death claims another victim!

This is the true history of "heart disease,"—so called, which in reality is chiefly a secondary effect of Bright's disease of the kidneys, and indicates the universal need of that renowned specific Warner's safe cure.

B. F. Larabee, Esq., of Boston, who was by it so wonderfully cured of Bright's disease, in 1879, says that with its disappearance went the distressing heart disorder, which he then discovered was only secondary to the renal trouble.

There is a general impression that the medical profession is not at fault if it frankly admits that heart disease is the cause of death. In other words, a cure of heart disease is not expected of them!

There may be no help for a broken down, worn out, apoletic heart, but there is a help for the kidney disorder which in most cases is responsible for the heart trouble, and if its use put money and fame into the treasury of the profession instead of into the hands of an independent investigator, every graduated doctor in the world would exclaim of it, as one, nobler and less prejudiced than his fellows, once exclaimed: "It is a God-send to humanity?"

What therefore must be the public estimate of that bigotry and want of frankness which forbids in such cases (because forsooth it is a proprietary article), the use of the one effective remedial agency of the age?

"Heart disease," indeed! Why not call such things by their right names?

"Why not?

"Dead without a moment's warning." This likewise is an untruth! Warnings are given by the thousand. Physicians are "not surprised." They "expected it!" They know what the end will be, but the victim?—"oh no, he mustn't be told, you know, it would only frighten him, for there is no help, you know, for it!"

The fate that attended "Little Mac" and the five governors is not a royal and exclusive one—it threatens every one who fails to heed the warnings of nature as set forth above.

In order that sufferers may know that Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets will always cure them. H. C. Geisler emphatically says that if the Tablets do not relieve every case of Dyspepsia, Constipation, Sour Stomach, Sick Headache, Heartburn, &c., &c. he does not want any pay. The physicians say they are the finest combination that can be found. Price 25 cents. 27eow.

During a serious run of whooping cough at Stillwater, N. Y., the physician found that Aker's English Remedy was positive cure, and prescribed it very freely. H. C. Geisler says that in all his experience he had never known any medicine to equal it. He guarentees it to cure all Coughs (especially chronic cases), Croup, Asthma and Consumption. 27eow.

It is asserted that certain Albany butchers purchase the carcasses of cattle which die on the cars en route to the stock yards in that city and sell the meat to poor people.

Our readers are cautioned about buying medicines which are not endorsed by some well known druggist. H. C. Gisler, has made a thorough study of Blood diseases, and after a careful investigation, and many practical tests, positively asserts that Acker's Blood Elixir will cure all blood disorders, ridding the system of its impurities, and leaving it strong, vigorous and healthy. He will warrent it. It is a certain cure for all skin diseases. 27eow

JOHN MCCULLOUGH, the actor, died at his home in Philadelphia Sunday afternoon. His death was not entirely unexpected. He attained his great fame through association with Forest.

GENERAL PHIL SHERIDAN thought that General McClellen should have had a military funeral. He said that the absence of either sword or flag from the coffin made him feel that "Little Mac" was not getting a soldier desertes. The funeral was in accordance with General McClellen's wishes.

OUR Washington letter, which will be found in another column, touches upon the most important political topics of the week. Our correspondent is original and terse with his subjects. These letters will be found from week to week, giving a summary of the doings of Congress while in session. They are of special interest and should be read by all THE TIMES readers.

AMONG the most eloquent tributes of admiration paid to the late Gen. Geo. B. McClellan, was that of the Rev. Mr. Talmage delivered Sunday, Nov. 1st. He said:

"George B. McClellan was something higher than ex-Commander-in-Chief of the American Armies. He was the highest style of a Christian gentleman. As such I knew him. The gigantic injustices done him never ruffled his spirit, because his trust was in God, and not in the caprices of human nature. If General McClellan had obeyed the popular clamor that cried 'on to Richmond,' it would have been the destruction of the army and the ruin of the United States Government. The army was not ready for the movement that the people demanded. It always has been so in invention, in scientific discovery and in war, that a certain number of men must do ungrateful and unappreciated work and then later on, when things are all matured, others come in and get all the credit. The battle of Antietam, where McClellan commanded, was just as great as the battle of Gettysburg, where Meade commanded, or the battle before Richmond, where Grant commanded. The difference was the difference between the orchard in June, when the fruit is green, and September when the fruit is ripe. But the hero yesterday broke ranks and went up to the Lord of hosts, and in the land of eternal justice will meet many of those whose dying moments he solaced with sympathetic words at Chickahominy."

One case of diphtheria is reported at Pulaski.

Charles Webb, an old and respected resident of Mexico, died last Thursday after a long and painful illness.

Some parties from North Williamstown assembled last week in Orwell to "horn" a young man whom they supposed had taken a wife. The young fellow was not married, he was not at home, and his mother set the bull dog on the horners, who decamped at a lively gait.—[Pulaski Democrat.

Sixty-four wholesale boot and shoe agents are traveling in regular routes through this section of the state. There are also forty grocerymen, forty tobacco men and a proportionate number in other lines of goods. Each of these gentlemen sell a share of the goods purchased and very likely pay their expenses, salary and a small margin of profit for the houses they represent.—[Pulaski Democrat.

William Milliman of Baldwinsville was found dead on the floor of the kitchen in his father's house at Baldwinsville Thursday, with a gun shot wound in his breast. The young man, since the death of his mother a year ago, has been subject to fits of despondency, and being alone this afternoon went into the kitchen, removed his clothing, tied one end of a fish line to his toe and the other to the trigger of a shot gun. He then discharged the contents of the gun into his heart.

Last spring Frank Snow of Orwell, married, eloped with a "red-headed girl from Canada" named Christie Rose, and went to Michigan. A few weeks ago he wrote to his father for money to bring him home, saying he was sorry for what he had done and would do better. The money was sent and he came, but he seems to have maintained correspondence with his paramour, and a few nights ago he left again but was arrested at Sandy Creek and brought before a justice, tried and held to bail in the sum of $500, $250 for bad behavior and $250 for the support of his family for one year or one year in jail.

[illegible] Democratic President in the White House since James Buchanan retired from the Presidential chair amid the gathering gloom of impending war. The strangeness and significance of the situation cannot but be felt by all.

The year's election being over, political astronomers, whose telescopes have been sweeping different states, will now fix their gaze on Washington. Everything points to an unusually interesting winter here, and to times of excitement on capitol Hill. A Republican Senate and a Democratic House, a Democratic President and a Republican Senate, Democratic free-traders and Democratic protectionists, Republican protectionists and Republican free-traders, administration and anti-administration civil service reformers, and Democratic and Republican silver and anti-silver men, are factors conducive to anything but harmony. The house will talk, debate, and wrangle endlessly over "Tariff for revenue only," civil service reform, silver money, and various other questions. But for a good share of the winter's excitement, you may safely rely upon antagonism between the White House and the Upper House of Congress.

This city is always interested in elections, no matter how important, and those of Tuesday commanded marked attention. The Cabinet officers received telegrams from the various telegraphic companies, and prominent officials remained at their offices at night discussing the returns.

The question of how the Democratic gains would affect the Administration, has been discussed wherever politicians congregate. Some say appointments will be made more rapidly now, the impression being that the President will have to yield, and the party be put in undisputed control. Others express the opinion that nothing could change Mr. Cleveland, that he has been pursuing a course that seemed right to him, and that the result of a mere election in New York could not affect his policy. It is the prevalent opinion that the President, feeling his administration endorsed and strengthened, will not relax, but rather become more rigid in his adherence to his financial policy.

Employes of the U. S. Government here may be said to be out of politics. Few of them went home to vote, and lack of interest was inferred from the fact that they remained at work at their desks on election day, instead of visiting the bulletin boards, and exchanging news in the Department corridors.

After much searching the President has found two gentlemen who are willing to accept places on the Civil Service Commission. One is ex-Congressman Edgerton, of Indiana, the other Col. Trenholm, of South Carolina. Mr. Dorman B. Eaton has been temporarily re-appointed, and will remain in office long enough to induct the new members into their duties. As both of the new men are Democrats, the political complexion of the board will accord with the Administration. They will have a hard task before them, and cannot be expected to please everybody. It will be impossible ever to have a Commission capable of avoiding all the snares that lurk in the pathway of a civil service Commissioner. The civil service law now in existence cannot be administered without blasting hopes and aspirations. The law must constantly clash with a large class of worthy people who think that the Government needs their services, and are certain that they need the Government's pay.

During the next few weeks Senators, Members of the House, their families, and the crowd of place hunters that Congress brings will be arriving daily, and the Capitol will soon again wear its busy, bustling, crowded, winter aspect.

The new Congress will have no difficulty in effecting an organization promptly. Most of the old officers will be re-elected. Usually at this season an active campaign for the Speakership is opened, but the understanding that Mr. Carlisle is to be given a second term, deprives this year of that interesting feature of an opening Congress.

Cheese Market.

(FROM THE UTICA HERALD.)

AT UTICA Nov. 9.

The market to-day was by no means a pleasant one for salesmen, the drop in prices being considerably more than they had expected. It seems to be a fact that October cheese was just as fine as September this year, and some of the home dealers had rather have it because it is a later make and will keep a little longer. Still there is the prejudice in favor of September, and that, in connection with the state of things in New York and abroad, was considered a sufficient reason for the decline in price. One of the heaviest buyers was out of the market altogether, which made the competition somewhat less also. To-day's sales will take cheese off on an average to the middle of October, altho' some who sold out their September early are off beyond the 20th. Several lots of September cheese that have been held over were not offered by their salesmen to-day, the feeling being that, inasmuch as they had held thus long they might as well continue and take the chances Transactions are as follows: Two lots, 135 boxes, at 8¾c.; 31 lots, 2,161 boxes, at 8¾c.; 8 lots, 1,015 boxes, at 9c.; 2 lots, 150 boxes, at 9⅛c.; 8 lots, 721 boxes, at 9¼c.; 50 boxes at 9¼c. Sales 5,760 boxes; commissions, 2,366 boxes; total, 8,126 boxes Ruling price, 8¾c. On same day last year transactions were 7,657 boxes, at 11¼c.; two years ago, 7,730 boxes, at 11c.

LITTLE FALLS, Nov. 9.

Prices have declined still further, being about one-half cent below last week's figures. Salesmen seeing no hope for better rates quite generally acceded to the decline and sold fair amounts. Fine cheese found a quick market at 9c. and if full cream 9¼c. was readily obtained. Rumors were current that this rate had been exceeded, but they were not corroborated. Buyers had plenty of orders to fill but were limited to above prices, and some of them would have been glad to secure much more cheese than they did. Most of the stock sold was October make, tho' there was a small amount of September cheese. Upon the average cheese in this vicinity is off to about October 20. Not being rated as good in quality as September, there appears no hope that prices will again advance to former rates for the balance yet to be sold. Trade to-day is shown by the following list:

Lots.	Boxes.	Price
8	137	8¾cts

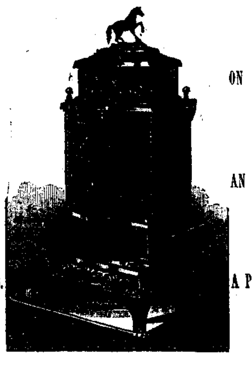
Howe Ventilating Stove.

A NEW STOVE. ON A NEW PRINCIPLE.

A HANDSOME STOVE. AN EXCELLENT HEATER.

AN ECONOMICAL STOVE. A PERFECT VENTILATOR.



☞A good Base Burner of any kind will heat a room, but it also destroys and burns up the life principle of the air. Foul air if hot will not keep a person warm. The Howe Ventilating Stove warms the room and keeps the air pure. It Ventilates the room at the same time that it heats it. Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

[illegible] in the [illegible] number of the Journalist:

"Chester Arnold Lord, managing editor of the Sun, was born in Romulus, Seneca county, N. Y., in 1850. His father was a Presbyterian clergyman and a fighting chaplain in the Union Army. After an academical education, young Lord entered Hamilton college. He began his journalistic career on the Oswego Daily Advertiser, in the fall of 1869. One of the three partners who owned the paper was E. H. Purdy, an old Tribune compositor. In 1871, while Purdy was on a visit to New York City, he stopped in the Sun office to see his old fellow compositor, Amos J. Cummings. In conversation with Cummings and Dr. Wood, he casually mentioned the fact that they had a phenomenal newspaper man on the Press up in Oswego. Cummings and Wood pricked up their ears, made some inquiries, and invited Mr Lord to come to New York and accept a situation on the Sun. At that time Lord was city editor of the Advertiser, now the Oswego Times. Like all young and bright country journalists, his face had been turned towards the Mecca of newspaper men. He promptly accepted Cummings' offer and was placed in reportorial harness. He proved to be an exceptional reporter. Within three months he was thoroughly conversant with the city and its environs. His talent was confined to no one sphere in journalism. He reported dog fights, scenes in police courts, and the proceedings of theological synods with equal facility. He had gained an insight into human nature, and the rare faculty of making dry reports interesting. He was honest and industrious. Sociable and entertaining in manner and disposition, he made many friends. His work attracted the attention of Mr. Dana, and after filling subordinate positions, he was made managing editor of the paper five years ago, on the retirement of Mr. Ballard Smith. Mr. Lord is one of the managing editors who is always found at his desk. His editorial associates are invariably his friends. As a managing editor, he is eminently practical. The best work he ever did—and a work that gave the people immense satisfaction—was his collection of the New York State election returns last fall. He made his preparations independently of the Associated Press, and he stood by his figures, claiming the election of Cleveland from the first on the strength of the figures sent to him by his correspondent, without regard to outside reports. The sequel proved that he was right. Mr. Lord is fair complexioned, has light hair and mustaches, regular features and keen blue eyes. He is well knit, and dresses with taste and refinement. He is a first-class amateur fisherman, and usually spends his summer vacations in the North Woods, where trout and deer are plentiful.

The Salvation Army.

The Phoenix Chronicle has a column article of good sound sense on the doings and results of the Salvation Army movement in that village. The editor argues that the methods put forth by the army to attain good results are wrong. He is right. No lasting good can ever come of so open a violation of the religious doctrines as set forth in the Scriptures. The intention of the leaders in this crusade is no doubt of a pure motive but the manner in which meetings are conducted in many places is demoralizing and highly offensive to all right thinking people of every, or no belief. Therefore we must acknowledge that the field for work is limited. The Chronicle makes this wise suggestion to the army:

"Let the Salvation Army sell its tambourines; Phoenix people will not miss their unmusical rattle; let it send the small boys who occupy the platform evenings home to their parents, and tell them to go to Sunday school every Sunday and to bed early every night; let them send "Kansas Carrie" and her youthful companion home to Fulton and tell them to go to school until they arrive at a suitable age when they are supposed to have some judgment; they are too young now to enter upon the life of a Bohemian, even in the cause of Christianity. Let them do this, which is to bring their meetings within the pale of respectability, and we guarantee the hilarious youth on the back seat and all other disturbing elements will vanish with the above objectionable features. And we are not sure, should the tambourines and pretty girls be dismissed, that the entire Army might not soon follow. And if it did, we do not know that the five churches could not accomplish all the good work to be done in Phoenix and with a more lasting result."

School Commissioner Metcalf is in town making arrangements for the teachers institute which occurs the first week in December. All who can entertain one or more of the visiting teachers are urgently requested to leave their names with F. E. Bacon at once. They will please bear in mind that they are not expected to extend this hospitality gratuitously and they will not be asked to. It is earnestly hoped that sufficient encouragement will be given Mr. Metcalf, or in the future the institute will be held in towns that are more hospitable.

There are some prospects of Mr. Howard's securing the well-known Redpath Concert Company of Boston, to give one of their enjoyable entertainments in the opera house Nov. 24th. When they were here last winter it was a stormy night, but everyone that attended will join with us in saying that the opera house never held a more pleased audience. Each artist was encored several times. They only came by Mr. Howard's guaranteeing them a certainty, and we hope that everyone will interest themselves and greet them with a full house, and by so doing encourage the manager in securing us this class of attractions.

The Benefit Concert.

The benefit concert given at Stephens opera house, last Friday evening, for Fred Kenyon, was a grand success, both financially and otherwise. The young people who so generously gave their time and labor to the worthy cause, were given to understand that their efforts were appreciated, by a liberal response from our citizens. The following excellent programme was rendered:

1 Piano Solo,—"3d Ballade" – op. 47 Chopin
Mr. Fred Kenyon.
2 Male Quartette—"Serenade"
Messrs. Hadcock, Allen, Foster, Bacchus.
3 Vocal Duette—"See the Pale Moon" Campana
Miss Stephens and Mr. Allen.
4 Vocal Solo—"Angel at the Window," Bertholdi Tours.
Mr. Hadcock.
5 Piano Duette—"Overture to Peter Schmoll," Weber
Misses Jennings and Dada.
6 Mixed Quartette—"Give me my own Native Isle," C. A. White
Misses Johnson and Foster,
Messrs. Allen and Bacchus.
7 Vocal Solo—"Who will buy my Roses," Schleiffarth
Miss Stephens.
8 Violin and Piano Duette—"Nocturne," op.9 No 2 Chopin
Mr. Kenyon and Miss Jennings.
9 Vocal Trio—"O Restless Sea," C. A. White
Miss Stephens, Messrs Hadcock and Foster.
10 Male Quartette—"Church in the Wildwood"
Messrs Hadcock, Allen, Foster, Bacchus.
11 Vocal Duette—"The Hunter's Song," Kucken
Misses Johnson and Dada.
12—Piano Solo— { a. Traumerei, Schumann / b. Hunting Song, Mendelssohn }
Miss Jennings.
13 Vocal Solo—"Angel's Serenade," C. Braga
Miss Foster
With Violin obligato, Mr. Kenyon.
14 Chorus—"Night's shade no longer," from Moses in Egypt, Rossini

Few home talent entertainments pass off as successfully as did this one. Several of the selections, both vocal and instrumental, were difficult and were rendered in a very creditable manner. In justice to three or four of the singers we would say they were suffering from very severe colds, and were deprived of the full use of their vocal abilities. After the concert, the young people repaired to the home of Miss Dada, where they were treated to refreshments Before the opening of the entertainment the Fulton band kindly contributed several choice selections in front of the opera house. The receipts netted, clear of all expenses, about $100.

Kicked By a Horse.

A six year old son of James Nelson of Granby, while attempting to catch a horse last Friday, was kicked in the head by the animal and seriously injured. A long, deep gash was cut on the left side of the face, extending from the corner of the left eye to the back of the jaw. The wound was dressed by Dr. Pardee, who reports the boy as doing well. The story was circulated Monday that the lad's skull was fractured and later that he was dead. This story has no foundation.

To The Public.

Fred Kenyon, for whom the benefit concert was given last Friday night, desires to express his sincere thanks to the young ladies and gentlemen who so kindly assisted him; also to those who patronized his concert or contributed in any way to make it the success it was. He wishes to make special mention of the fine music rendered by the Fulton band, and the beautiful display of flowers furnished by numerous friends, as both added much to the pleasure of the evening.

"Si Perkins" in Town.

There was a fair audience assembled at the Opera House last evening, and they were kept in a continual roar of laughter from the time the curtain was raised until it dropped after the last act. Mr. Frank Jones, in the character of "Si Perkins from Pughtown," was irresistible. His make up was immense, and he delighted the audience with his droll sayings. Miss Alice Montague as "Laura, a gypsie waif," won the hearts of the audience by her natural acting. The other members of the company were all first class, and gave excellent support. It is without doubt the finest troupe that has visited Newburgh for a number of years. They give another performance to-night and deserve a good house.—[Newburgh Register, Sept. 16.

This company appears in Stephens opera house next Friday evening. Tickets on sale at Watson's.

The Fire department attended the funeral in a body. Several firemen from Oswego were present.

Resolutions of Respect.

The following resolutions were adopted at a special meeting of the Fire department, held at the Engine House Saturday, Nov. 7th:

Whereas, William S. Hethington, for many years a member of this Department and engineer of Steamer No. 2, has suddenly been called from among our number by the inscrutable decrees of Providence, and

Whereas, His loss deprives us of one of our most efficient, faithful, generous and respected members, and creates a vacancy in our ranks impossible to be filled, therefore

Resolved, That this Department attend the funeral in a body, wearing appropriate badges of mourning.

Resolved, That the Engine House and the Company rooms be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in both the village papers and an engrossed copy presented to the widow of deceased.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy is tendered to the widow and friends of our deceased comrade in their bereavement.

A Brutal Assault.

Last Saturday evening a German in the employ of Aaron Stranahan of Bowens Corners, was on his way from this village to the home of his employer, with two other men, all more or less intoxicated. Just before reaching home the two men commenced an assault on the German and finally threw him from the wagon, and drove away. The man in striking the ground broke his ankle, and being unable to make his way home, lay by the roadside until morning, when he was found and taken care of. Dr. E. F. Marsh was called and reduced the fracture. Poormaster Gilbert has been notified and will commence an action against the assailants.

A Serious Charge.

John D. Spencer, of Mexico, was arrested last Friday by United States deputy marshal George Wood, and taken before United States commissioner Getty on a charge of robbing the United States mail. Spencer pleaded not guilty and gave bail in the sum of $500 to appear Nov. 23. The articles alleged to have been taken by Spencer are two Easter eggs and a Christmas card. The warrant for his arrest was sworn out by Carrie Barnes of Mexico, to whom he gave the articles.

SPECIAL DAYS.

Friday and Saturday of This Week,

AT F. E. BACON'S

Special bargains will again be given to our customers in a number of different lines of goods. These goods will be remarkably cheap and will be just the goods everyone needs. If the people will come as thick and fast as in October for our bargains we shall do still [illegible] in November.

[illegible] small cobs are better than large. The corn on such is less liable to mold.

Almost every man can make extensive and accurate experiments in farm work, but all can take a good paper and keep themselves posted as to what other people are doing.

A gentleman says that after losing 160 chickens by the cholera, he found that a tablespoonful of soda mixed with a quart of milk and given with the food was a cure.

The flesh of cattle unprotected from storms, and compelled to pick up their living through droughts and through the winter, will necessarily be greatly inferior to that of cattle well supplied with water and food, says the Chicago Tribune.

Cider should be made only from perfectly clean and sound apples if it is expected to be good. Insist on cleanliness being practiced at every stage of the making. For preserving it there should first be slow fermentation in a cool place, and after fermentation bung tightly. It will soon become clear, when it should be racked off in bottles.

Fowls can be fattened well in a fortnight if they are cooped up where they can obtain gravel and lime and are fed on scalded cornmeal, give them three times a day while ears of corn are always at hand. For drink, skimmed milk is very desirable, and if warmed a little will be drank with eagerness. Pulverized charcoal, kept either in their boxes or mixed with feed, will materially assist the fattening process.

It Will Ruin the Business.

"Inventions are well enough in their way," said a West Side barber yesterday, "but when it comes to taking the bread and butter right out of a man's mouth I think a stop ought to be put to it."

"What's the matter now?" inquired a customer as he took a flake of lather out of his left eye.

"Matter," said the barber; "why, here's a scheme that is going to ruin the barber's trade. That is what if the matter. Some blooming idiot has invented a patent shaving machine, and it is a daisy, too.

He took out a steel instrument which was constructed on the principle of a plane. The razor was placed on the lower surface, and was guaged so that the tool could be worked over the face and cut off the beard without mutilating the skin or interfering with blotches or pimples.

"I'll show you how devilish it is," said the barber, and he went to work upon a customer's face.

It required no skill to use the instrument, and in less than a minute the man's face was as smooth as a new-born babe's. "That's just the trouble," remarked the barber. "Any chump can use this business. Why, a man can shave himself in a car or on a steamer, drunk or sober, and it's a physical impossibility for him to cut himself. I tell you we barbers have got to do something about it. If we don't we'll lose all our customers, as every one will buy one of these blamed things and shave himself." At this point the hair artist became so excited that he poured the contents of a bottle of bay rum down the customer's neck, and the reporter, who had been a witness of the scheme, seized the opportunity to make his escape.—[Chicago Tribune.

The pain and misery suffered by those who are afflicted with dyspepsia are indescribable. The distress of the body is equalled or surpassed by the confusion and tortures of the mind, thus making its victims suffer double affliction. The relief which is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla has caused thousands to be thankful for this great medicine. It dispels the causes of dyspepsia, and tones up the digestive organs. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Dull Times and Advertising.

Entering the store of a prosperous merchant recently, a gentleman, a stranger in town, says the Albany Journal, expressed surprise at the busy scene that greeted him, he inquired of the proprietor how it was that he was getting more than his share of business in these dull days. The merchant replied:

"I attribute the large business I do every summer to just two things: First, I advertise bargains and keep my store before the public; second, when the public call I satisfy it by keeping my advertised promises. It cost me $6,000 to learn this lesson, and it has paid me at least $25,000. During the three successive summers during the hard years that followed 1878, I ran behind in this store on an average of $2,000 every year. I made up my mind that there was business to do and that I would do it. In the middle of the worst and dullest year that we had, when clerks were absent on their vacations and half of the force in the store was idle, I started in and spent $1,200 in advertising midsummer bargains, remnants, old stock, and so on. Within a week my store was so full of business that I had to send for every clerk who was away, and I added two extra clerks. That year instead of a loss of $2,000 in the summer, I made $2,500 besides what I paid for advertising. I have kept it up ever since. That was the most expensive lesson I ever learned, but it was the most instructive and the most remunerative. If I had to start business again as poor as I was when I started, I would make it a rule to spend at least one-half of what my rent cost in advertising in home papers. I would not waste it on cheap methods, but would spend it judiciously in the best advertised department and in the most largely circulated paper."

The newest stockings have the lower half in solid color and the upper half in a sharp contrasting color.

A simple and stylish way of trimming sleeves is to use inch wide galloon or velvet ribbon instead of cuffs.

A new fancy on skirts made in pleats and panels, is that of having large side pocket of the material set on each hip.

English homespun tailor-made suits are to be worn this winter; they are made plain and are often trimmed with very large buttons.

A novelty in the way of a Parisian bonnet has the front trimming of mixed lace, velvet, bits of golden gauze and autumn flowers.

London milliners are making a specialty of college caps in velvet and other material to correspond with costumes for autumn wear.

Sashes are still worn, and are generally worn so as to form a point in front at the waist; sometimes revers are put on to simulate a sash.

New veils to wear with small bonnets revived the old mask shapes with rounded fronts and pointed ends! the veil is the same color as the bonnet worn.

Silk sashes, eleven inches wide and three and a quarter yards long, have silver and gold bars with brocade figures, and are edged with changeable plush.

Corsets with coarse "soie de sanglier," in plain English wild boar bristles, instead of whalebone, are a success in Paris. They are recommended for sanitary reasons.

Heavy, woolen canvas goods in flue or large meshes, come plain in stripes forming plaids for underskirts and trimmings, or plain with dots and geometrical figures raised upon the canvas surface.

In London this winter the rage will be for buttons—that is, for ladies' costumes. They have been big before, but they will be immense now; some of them costly also, for they are beautifully carved in ivory.

Great discretion must be used by wearers of horizontal stripes. They are becoming to very tall and slender figures but when adopted by ladies of medium or low stature are apt to give too rotund an appearance.

One of the items of novelties which ladies will patronize is the newly discovered combination scarf or fichu. The scarf passes right round with a tight twist on the chest, comes forward again over the hips, and then presents two neatly centered pockets.

Cure for Croup.—Use Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil according to directions. It is the best remedy for all sudden attacks of colds, pain and inflammation, and for injuries.

A Sensible Answer.

A capital story has just been raked up concerning the late Justice Maule, and those who are now agitating about children and oath-taking in courts of justice should study its wisdom. At a trial over which Mr. Maule presided, great doubt was expressed as to whether a little girl that had been called as a witness knew the nature of an oath. To silence controversy, the judge asked the child if she knew where she would go to if she told a lie. "No, sir." To which the judge added: "A very sensible answer. Neither do I know where you will go to. You may swear the witness."

BETTER THAN SHE EXPECTED.

"Your letter received. In reply I am happy to say that Parker's Hair Balsam did much more for me than you said it would, or than I expected. My hair has not only stopped falling out, but the bald spots are all covered, and all my hair has grown thicker, softer and more lively than it was before my sickness a year ago. "You don't mean it Doctor," she answered, "but your advice may be good for all that. Sometimes what you call "quack stuff" is the best and most scientific medicine, after all." He Made Himself a Prisoner.

A New London Telegraph reporter recently found a friend with a pair of handcuffs on and accompanied by an officer. Both got speedily out of sight in a baggage car, but the reporter insisted on having the facts, and they were told him in confidence. Then he printed them in his paper thus. The officer speaks: "I was in Mystic yesterday on police business, and, finding that my watch required attention, I took it to a jeweler and left it with him to be cleaned. I came to New London this morning, and the first man I met was my friend Jim here. He proposed that we go and have a smile, and we went. While smiling, Jim's hand struck against my coat and rattled the handcuffs I carried there. Jim's curiosity was excited, and he took them out to examine them. Having looked them all over and admired the fine temper and mechanism, he tried them on both wrists and snapped the lock. After a minute he asked me to take them off, and I reached for the key, which I always carry on my watch guard. Well, the watch guard is in Mystic, and so is the key. Jim is going there, too. There was nothing in New London that could get these things off, for they are made to stay." As the Sheriff concluded, he looked over at Jim and just bellowed. The reporter also looked at Jim and helped the Sheriff bellow. He was the most sheepish looking mortal that ever took a ride by rail.—[Hartford Times.

MIGNON'S HEART.

During one of the longer journeys I made, in my youth I met with a German singer traveling on foot, carrying his knapsack. The poor artist had sold his theatrical wardrobe, had no longer the means to pay for a night's lodging, and was singing in the streets to obtain the price of a meal.

Pitying his forlorn condition, for it was evident from his appearance that he had seen better days, I asked him what had reduced him to such extremities. Seidler—for that was the name of once celebrated tenor—wept bitterly as related to me the history of his misfortunes.

"There was a time," said he, "when I had a beautiful voice; the public delighted in listening to me and I even loved to hear myself, but alas! between one day and the next, my voice became harsh and broken through my own fault perhaps. I am no longer an artist because I was too much of a man. I have lost the heart of Mignon!"

"The heart of Mignon?" said I.

"Yes, when one has lost it as I have, one can sing no longer. Whilst one has it, one sings and delights great audiences. To lose Mignon's heart is a proverb well known among the singers of my country—a story and tradition, call it what you like."

"I would like to hear it, Seidler. Let us go and smoke in a quiet place, and the Johannisberger which colors the glasses will enlighten your memory with its golden luster."

The gloomy countenance of Seidler brightened up, his last fear was lost in a smile, and he related me the the following story, short, simple and yet mysterious, full of poetic sentiment and charming morality.

* * * * * * * *

A young singer from the Imperial Theatre of Vienna, walking on the Prater one day, saw a young girl singing to the promenaders. Her voice was refined, sweet and melancholy. The singer approached and asked her name. "My name is Mignon; till this morning I belonged to a troop of acrobats and tumblers, but my little talent displeased my master, the head mountebank, he wish- to teach me dancing and I would only learn music; he could see in me only a bad ballet dancer, and I think I am good for nothing but a singer."

"What has become of your master, Mignon?"

"I do not know; he beat me this morning and then went away."

"What are you going to do then?"

"I am going to sing that I may not seem to beg."

"Will you come with me Mignon?"

"Who are you? One does not go with strangers."

"I am an artiste who does not sing so well as you, Mignon, but I love sweet voices and pretty singers."

"An artiste! a singer," cried the girl, "Give me your hand. You shall be my master and your servant is ready to follow you."

A month after this meeting, the actor whose name was Stephen, and the singer, whose name was Mignon, were already the best friends in the world. They sang together every day, they lived amidst the frills of an interminable duet. In a case like this duet music resembles calumny; something always remains behind.

[illegible] Stephen and Mignon the result [illegible] and a great deal of [illegible] One evening Stephen had been [illegible] the exquisite "Il mio tesoro," [illegible] at the feet of the [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] you a kiss [illegible] Stephen [illegible] moved by [illegible] of nothing more [illegible] "Il mio tesoro," [illegible] adoring Mignon. He sang with unparalleled spirit and inspiration; never had his voice been so pure, so brilliant, so charming as now, in this supreme moment of joy and love. One might almost have said that the singer had discovered taste, sentiment, the true passion and genius of music upon the lips of his mistress, in the heart of Mignon. In the inner life of great artists, those elect who live through the imagination, the heart, the spirit, there is nearly always a woman hidden, a muse, an Egeria, an enchantress who loves and inspires by her heart or her kisses.

From that day forward Stephen, who felt that he was singing wonderfully, promised himself to reach fame and fortune. Mignon promised herself to aid him by her counsels, her memories and her lessons; she would be the one to help and secretly direct his new studies; she became his instructor in love and song. When Stephen reappeared at the Court theatre, after a long absence, the audience absolutely failed to recognize the voice of the singer. It had become penetrating, spiritual, caressing, marvelous. Never had been heard anything so brilliant, yet so soft, so expressive, so impassioned as the song of the young actor. The heart of Mignon sang there. She was proud of the talent and fame of Stephen. The poor girl studied from morning till night, the better to teach her lover all the most wonderful arts of song, the most difficult resources of music, the very mysteries of perfection. Stephen's success was her masterpiece, and it was truly the heart of Mignon through the lips of Sthephen that sang in the Court theater. So long as her beloved loved her still and was good enough to tell her so, so long as he brought her the boquets the public bestowed upon the wonderful singer, so long as he returned her valuable lessons with protestations and tenderness, so long the young girl believed she had nothing to ask or desire in this world. But her joy was not to last, her happiness was to end as quickly as a romance. In the pride and intoxication of triumph, Stephen began to resemble the hero of a French play; when a gambler is fortunate he forgets and disdains the love of Angelique. When fortune leaves and betrays him, he returns to the woman who loved him and adores her again. Just so it was with Stephen's grand passion; when he was happy in the enthusiasm of the audience, neglect to the beauty, tenderness and devotion of Mignon. If the public was cold and lost some of its admiration and enthusiasm, then he became loving to the poor child once more; he found her charming, pretty, clever and adored her.

Soon Stephen imagined that he no longer needed to draw inspiration from the taste, the lessons, the voice or the heart of Mignon. He ended by seeing in her only a poor girl to be pitied, a faithful mistress who loved much, a devoted friend with much resignation. Stephen liked to live in the land of roughed gallantry, in the equivocal kingdom behind the scenes. Mignon had a great fault in his eye; she was not an actress she had at her feet neither flatterers slaves, lovers nor poets; she wore no garlands of faded flowers, and her simple attire was not theatrical finery. Her face was rosy without paint, her hands white without bleaching, her breath sweet without perfume. No! She was no actress, she was satisfied with being a woman. Mignon did not think of complaining, of grieving; perhaps she determined to let herself die as quickly as possible without suicide.

The health of the young girl failed daily and alarmed everybody except Stephen. Mignon forced herself in vain to struggle against suffering and weakness, and one evening she fell unconscious and almost dead in the arms of her physician.

When she came to herself late at night, pale, motionless, voiceless and unrecognizable, Mignon saw Stephen seated at the head of her bed, bending sadly toward the young invalid, as though to whisper to her pity and consolation.

She thanked him for his visit, his kind looks, his sadness, with a smile, a tear and a sigh.

"Dear Mignon," said Stephen, "God himself has avenged you and punished me.

"God avenged me," murmured Mignon.

"Yes, my fame and fortune are ended; the day that I began to forget and betray you I felt the first effects of the Divine anger."

"What has happened, Stephen?"

"I cannot sing any longer, Mignon, the last notes of my voice died away with the last sighs of our happiness. I have lost all that I owed to the [illegible] tion of your love. God has [illegible] on my lips, and song has [illegible]"

"You cannot sing any [illegible]

"I shall never sing [illegible]

"But you will sing [illegible] young invalid. "You [illegible] love [illegible]

[illegible]

A few hours after this scene the poor child was at the point of death. Mignon gave [illegible] a long, melancholy kiss, she breathed her last sigh and the spirit of Mignon passed into the heart of Stephen. Two or three days after death Stephen entered her chamber; the dreary look of the room inspired the poor artist with singular ideas, with loving regrets, with fantastic sentiments, which almost resembled madness. He handled the little articles she had used, he caressed the head of Mignon on that pillow where it no longer lay, and he uttered aloud to a phantom words which had once been whispered to the woman, Mignon above might be happy and proud; she was still loved and regretted.

Suddenly it seemed to Stephen that a mysterious voice, as sweet as that of his mistress, whispered low in his ear: "You can sing, God pardons and I inspire thee. Sing."

Stephen dried his tears and sat down before Mignon's piano. With trembling hand he struck the notes, his eyes turned to that heaven where he hoped to see that beloved one, when suddenly as if by a miracle, he sang with a voice that recalled his grandest inspirations the "Il mio tesoro," which he had so often sung at the feet of his mistress. It was the loving heart of Mignon which once more sung in Stephen.

From that time forward Stephen never sang in the theater without thinking of Mignon; he had loved herself and he adored her memory and this adoration brought good luck to his talent.

The story-teller added philosophically: "Is not the moral of this little love story charming? Is not the secret meaning of the tale clear to all those who live by the mind and imagination? To the artist, the poet or the author is necessary the inspiration of the woman that he loves or the memory of her whom he adored; in fact, the heart of Mignon."

THE PROPER THING.

Pointed bodices are the rule for evening dress.

A novelty is the use of brown bearskins for borders.

Cloth boots faced and foxed with kid are again worn.

Fur will be used as a trimming for evening dresses this winter.

Black Persian lamb skins are made in short, closely fitted jackets.

The newest seal-skin sacques are cut longer and fuller in the skirt.

Short mantles of seal-skin promise to be the most dressy wraps of the winter.

The newest circulars have shirred shoulders and a standing collar trimmed with fur.

Immense metal buttons again rival bead and silk cord fastenings, not only on jackets but dresses.

Cloth jackets are made in black or colors and richly trimmed in lengthwise fur bands or borders.

Pretty breakfast caps are made of cream white woolen lace, the meshes run through with velvet ribbon.

Velvet, silk, plush and camel's hair are used for short mantles and long cloaks, and are trimmed with fur.

Plain woolen fabrics are made up with sashes of the same material, with fine stripes of chenille at wide intervals.

Sets of deep Vandyke collars and cuffs in different colored velvets are pretty additions to cold weather toilets.

Fur fringes made of real or imitation tails of the same animal whose fur trims or forms the wrap, is a feature in this fall's wraps.

Brilliant cardinal, gold, dark blue and golden brown are the colors that enter largely into everything that is designed for garniture, and for much in dress also.

Turbans of seal-skin or of the black Persian lamb have higher crowns than those of last year, and may be worn either with or without a wide turned up all around.

In regard to furs Harper's Bazar says: "A set of furs to be worn with any wrap not trimmed with fur, now consists of a small collarette with square tabs in front reaching only half way to the waist, and a small round muff, or else the newer flat muff, curved slightly, and called the Crescent muff; this new muff is very light, and made up softly, so that young ladies ornament it by passing a ribbon (to match the dress) through it, and tying it in a large bow on top. The long chasuble collar with deep fronts like a mantilla is worn with a flat muff permanently attached to it at the waist line. Mink furs are restored to favor for brown sets, and rival those of natural beaver, which are so much worn by young ladies, while chinchilla [illegible]

[illegible] But the individual citizen could afford to be put to confusion and loss if such [illegible] were let go unwhipped of justice.

It is only the valuable thing that is counterfeited; it is only in the light of purity and virtue that iniquity and vice can be known. No one in these days would counterfeit a Confederate bond or note.

People who commit frauds always do it by simulating [illegible] preying on the [illegible] employing the fair name of virtue with which to give respectability to vice.

Let us explain: Seven or eight years ago, so we have been informed many times in public prints, a New York State gentleman was pronounced, as many millions have been pronounced before, incurably sick of an extreme disorder. By suggestions which he believed were providential, he was led to the use of a preparation which had been for several years employed by a select few physicians in New York city and one or two other prominent places. The result was that he was cured, he whom doctors of conceded ability said was incurable. Having secured possession of the formula absolutely and irrevocably, he determined to devote a portion of his accumulated wealth to the manufacture and sale of this remedy for the benefit of the many who suffer as he suffered, in apparent hopelessness. In less than three years, so tremendous became the demand for this remedy and so exalted the reputation, that he was obliged for his purpose to erect a laboratory and warehouse containing four and a quarter acres of flooring and filled with the most approved chemical and manufacturing devices. Probably there never was a remedy that has won such a meritorious name, such extraordinary sales and has accomplished so much good for the race.

Unprincipled parties who flourish only upon the ruins of others, saw in this reputation and sale an opportunity to reap a golden harvest, (not legitimately, not honorably) for which purpose they have made imitations and substitutions of it in every section of the country, and many druggists, who can make a larger profit on these imitation goods, often compromise their honor by forcing a sale upon the unposted customer.

Yes, undoubtedly the manufacturers could well afford to ignore such instances of fraud so far as the effect upon themselves is concerned, for their remedies have a constant unremitting sale, but they feel it to be their duty to warn the pbulic against such imitations and substitutions, non-secret and otherwise. The individual who buys them, and the public who countenances their sale alone suffer in mind, body and estate therefor.

The authors of some of these fraudulent practices have been prosecuted and sent to prison for their crimes, but there is another class who claim to know the formula of this remedy, and one Sunday school journal, we are told, has prostituted its high and holy calling so far as to advertise that for twenty-five cents it will send all new subscribers a transcript of the Warner formula! This formula, by the way, must be a wonderful kaleidoscopic affair, for there is hardly a month passes when some paper is not issued which pretends to give the only correct formula!

The manufacturers inform us that they would be perfectly willing that the public should know what the true formula of Warner's safe cure is, (none that have been published are anything like it) but even if every man, woman and child in the United States were as familiar with this formula as with their A B C's they could not compound the remedy. The method of manufacture is a secret. It is impossible to obtain the results that are wrought by this remedy if one does not have the perfect skill acquired only by years of practice for compounding and assimilating the simple elements which enter into its composition.

The learned Dr. Foster, the honored head of Clifton Springs sanitarium, once said that having roughly analyzed this remedy he recognized that the elements which composed it were simple but he attributed the secret of its power to the method of its compounding and this method no one knows except the manufacturers and no one can acquire it.

Our advice to our readers, therefore, cannot be too strongly emphasized. As you would prefer virtue to vice, gold to dross, physical happiness to physical misery, shun the imitator and refuse thereby to lend your aid financially to those who seek to get, by trading upon another's reputation and honesty, a sale for wares and goods which on their merits are fit only to be rejected as the veriest refuse. You can neither afford to patronize such people nor can you afford to take their injurious compounds into your system. When you call for Warner's safe cure see that the wrapper is black and white letters and that the wrapper and label bear an imprint of an iron safe, the trade mark, and that a safe is blown in the back of the bottle and that a perfect 1c promissory note stamp is over the cork. You can't be imposed upon if you observe these cautions.

We have the highest respect for the remedy we have mentioned and the highest regard for the manufacturers, and we cannot too highly commend their dignified and considerate tone in relation to those who would traduce their fair name and ruin the best interest of the public in such matters.

RIEL HANGED.

[illegible] Riel, the leader of the [illegible] and Indians in the recent [illegible] in the northwest, was hung at [illegible] minutes past eight o'clock [illegible] morning at Regina, for high treason against the queen of Great Britain. All are familiar with the details of his case. Once before, in 1869, he led a successful revolt against the Canadian government for similiar unjust treatment from their hands to his fellow half breeds and was pardoned. He was of French descent and received a college education. The French element have pleaded urgently for the commutation of Riel's sentence, but Canada's premier, Sir. John A. MacDonald, in whose hands his fate finally rested, turned a deaf ear to their cries for mercy, and sentence therefore took effect last Monday. Though he died the death of a felon he met death like a man, giving no evidence of quailing on the scaffold.

At present nothing more may terminate from the course which the government has taken in this matter, than the intense excitement which is now prevailing among the French. They are a people of lasting memory, however, and the intensified hatred toward Britons, revived by their hero's death, may stir them at the proper time to strike a treacherous blow to the Dominion. The execution of Riel was a poor move politically. The withdrawal of the good feeling and sympathy of so large a portion of Canada, is vastly widening the chances for a united patriotism and loyalty to the government.

Riel may have been a wicked man at heart, and deserving of death, and certainly was if report of the editor of the Winipeg Free Press is true. It is that during the rebellion, Riel made a proposition to the government to sell out his friends for a cash compensation of about $20,000. But would it not have been better for the government in the end, had Sir John A. MacDonald heeded the earnest protests of so powerful an element and sentenced him to imprisonment for life? Time will tell.

The tariff will be an important issue before Congress this winter.

The particulars of the execution of Riel may be interesting reading for Jefferson Davis.

The Ex-senator had gained notriety of late by the suit brought against him by Sarah Althea Hill of San Francisco. She claimed to have been secretly married to the millionaire, and offered in court a written agreement, purporting to be a marriage contract between them. Mr. Sharon declared the paper a forgery, but the court decided against him, and declared the alleged marriage contract genuine. They enter this and stand or sit around admiring the beautiful furniture and decorations until Sergeant Dinsmore throws open a pair of folding doors and the red portiere in front of them. Then President Cleveland, buttoned up in a tightly fitting black frock coat, appears. He comes just inside of the Room, so that he can retire the instant he wishes. A police officer takes a position just back of the sergeant. The crowd then moves up and the hand shaking begins.

A delegation of philanthropists has been here to interview the President on the question of the nation's treatment of her Indian wards. It would be difficult to conceive how any new point or original proposition could be made on a topic to which public attention has been called from every standpoint and from all sources. Mr. Cleveland listened to arguments older than the oldest Indian, and concurred in all that was said. He then added that he was ready to act whenever he was convinced of what was the first and best thing to do. If his callers could point out a good, sound, just, practical starting, he would start there. His visitors had outlined a theoretical programme, the execution of which would involve years of effort, but they had not pointed to the first step, and he insisted that the first step was the one he would have to take.

The President intimated, however, that he hoped to make a beginning in the right direction, during the remaining years of his administration. The delegation, consisting of General Fisk, Rev. Lyman Abbott, Hon. Erastus Brooks, and others, then went to the Interior Department and had a long interview with Secretary Lamar. The latter said among other things, he was impressed with the belief that the Christian religion was the instrumentality for the elevation of this race. But the Indian could not stand to be thrown out unprotected into the civilization of the country. He should be improved from one condition to another. The interests of the white people would be conserved by making the Indian a citizen, and giving him the right of suffrage. After swallowing 4,000,000 black slaves and digesting that mass pretty well, we should not strain at this. Still Secretary Lamar thought to make the Indian a citizen at present would be a sad service to him, and that there would be little of him left if it were done suddenly. Those who were ready for civilization he would push on, and those who were not he would protect.

Cheese Market.

AT UTICA Nov. 16.

A formal meeting of the board was held to-day, with President Merry in the chair. The question of closing the board for the season was discussed, and then put to vote, and it was decided that the market of November 30 should be the last of the year. The majority of the factories have closed, and several sold out their entire make to day. It was thought that two more weeks would practically clean up the make of the Oneida county factories. A number of large establishments have already closed, although they usually run through this month, and might have done so this year but for the fact that it did not seem worth while to burden the market with any more skimmed cheese, for, of course, that is the only kind that would be made now. Mr. Stark offered a resolution that the officers of the board be paid the same salaries as last year, which was unanimously assented to.

The market itself was exceedingly dull, and ¼c. off from last week. This was somewhat better than had been expected. Several lots of Septembers are still held here. It was rumored that one lot of these had been sold at 9¼c., and another at 9⅛c., but no such quotations were given in. Stock is now sold off to October 24 on an average, so that another week will probably clean up the make of that month.

Transactions of the day were as follows: 40 lots, 3,735 boxes at 8¾c.; 56 boxes at 8⅝c.; 7 lots, 383 boxes at 8¾c.; 30 boxes at 8⅞c.; 9 lots, 1,450 boxes at 9c. Sales, 6,184 boxes; commissions, 1,361; total, 7,545 boxes. Ruling price 8¾c. Transactions of corresponding day last year, 6,338 boxes, 11¼c ruling; of year before last, 8,511 boxes, ruling, 11¼c.

Little Falls, Nov. 16.

Cheese—Prices have again dropped off and are fully one-half of it below last week's figures, the ruling price to-day being 8¾c. Buyers had little strife to day, there being a unanimity of opinion as to what should be paid. It is well understood that the absence of foreign demand is the principal cause of decline, and very little if any of the cheese sold here to-day will be taken by the export trade. [illegible]

Owen Rafferty Shot.

Last Friday evening Owen Rafferty of Geddes, formerly of this village, was shot in a saloon by a man named O'Brien. It appears that just prior to the shooting the two men had had some difficulty, during which Rafferty threw O'Brien in the ditch. O'Brien went home and after procuring a revolver, followed Rafferty into the saloon. Approaching him from behind, he shot him twice, one ball taking effect in his right leg above the knee joint and the other entering near the left shoulder and passed in a downward direction, where it lodged just beneath the skin. The doctor thought the bullet had touched the lungs. O'Brien was locked up in the station house and Rafferty taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where he lies in a precarious condition.

Later reports are to the effect that Rafferty will probably recover. He is well known in Fulton and was thought to be quiet and good natured, but was ever ready to resent any offense with his fists. Rafferty is a brother of the canal boat captain who was injured at Cohoes last Wednesday night in a fight with the crew of another boat, and intended to leave for Troy the night he was shot.

Oswego Valley Stone Quarry.

The fine quality of the brown stone which is being quarried on the farm of O. J. Jennings, a mile below Fulton, has attracted wide attention by architects, builders and others. Last spring Messrs. Crabtree and Faulkner of this city leased for a term of years this quarry, and have been very successful in the sale of stone, particularly in the Western cities. They have lately received flattering offers from Foster & Clough, representing a syndicate of all the owners of the Ohio stone quarries for their lease and improvements. The latter will on Monday commence prospecting, with the aid of a steam drill. Should the quality of stone continue for a reasonable depth they will close a bargain for the entire quarry and will operate it in a manner commensurate with their vast resources. Captain Jennings is said to have a mine of wealth lying under the surface of his untilled acres.—[Syracuse Standard.

Come Again.

Frank Jones made his first appearance in Fulton as "Si Perkins," last Friday evening and was greeted by the largest house thus far this season although the weather was rather inclement. The play is a good one and shows up Jones as a clever comedian. Alice Montague, as Zana, the gypsy waif, ably assisted him. His support is good throughout. We gladly say, come again, Si.

Mr. Michael Mullen will sell at public auction, to-morrow, at 10 a. m., on his farm, three and one-half miles south of Fulton, 55 ewes in flocks of 5 to 10, twenty cows, three horses and five shoats.

District Attorney Mead is moving from Lower Oswego Falls into the residence which he recently purchased of E. W. Ross on First street in this village. His father-in-law, Dr. Hewitt, will reside with him.

Miss Eva White, a prominent singer of Philadelphia, is in town, and it is understood, desires to organize a class in vocal music. Several citizens who have heard Miss White sing, and are justly capable of criticising, say she has a superiorvo ice.

The meeting of the amusement club with Miss Georgie Lovejoy last Wednesday evening was an unusually pleasant gathering. The evening was mostly given to playing progressive euchre. The next meeting of the club will occur Thanksgiving eve. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Case, and will be a phantom party.

The case of Cornelius Murphy of this village, which was tried before U. S. Commissioner Getty of Oswego, last Thursday, for selling liquor outside of the Oswego Falls fair ground without a license has been adjourned to Dec. 2d, for final argument. Mr. Murphy has informed us that Commissioner Getty has since discharged him, fully exhonorated from the charge.

W. G. Gage & Co. have completed the system of piping in their mill for protection from fire. Upon the top of the mill is a network of pipes with which the entire exterior of the mill can be kept dripping with water and upon every floor is a system of piping so arranged that in case of a fire that the immediate vicinity would be flooded. The system is to be connected with the water works main and it is so arranged that should that supply be inadequate, the pides could be instantly connected with their powerful force pump, which will furnish an inexhaustible supply. A fire would stand a very poor show in this mill.

The Riverside and Oswego Mills of Oswego Falls are making some important improvements in the river near their headgates. Eight cribs have been sunk in the river south of the mills. To construct these cribs 78,000 feet of pine timber and 6,000 feet of oak were required. For a number of years the company have been troubled by the ice which would become packed in the head gates and shut off their water supply, necessitating the shutting down of the mills. These cribs are intended to obviate this difficulty and also to enable the channel to be deepened eventually. The cribs are anchored in their places and then stone is brought by boat and the crib is filled and sunk. Thomas Roxbury of Oswego is superintending the work and employs twenty-two men.

Every one who took part in the entertainment is deserving of praise. We but speak the sentiments of the community when we say that work for any such purpose should be encouraged. It certainly was an unjust time for cavilling criticism. There should be only encouragement for the performers and we trust that those who are so deserving will pay little heed to what seems to be the overflowing spleen of an uncharitable nature.

Teachers Institute.

By circular from the State Supt. we are directed to say to Trustees and teachers that in accordance with the spirit of the law passed May 27th 1885, it becomes necessary for each and every school in each of the Districts of Oswego county to be closed during the entire week of the Institute held at Fulton, Nov. 30, to Dec. 5, 1885, and that all teachers be present in order to receive the benefit named by that law of the public money. This notice is published as it is the decision of Hon. Wm. B. Ruggles, Supt. of Public Institution, that the attendance of a part of the session only does not comply with the statute. Every teacher must therefore be registered on Monday, the 30, and remain during the entire session.

Cues, Excuse and Corkscrews.

Don't think we refer to pool, billiards or champagne. If you do it will be a great mistake.

On the contrary, we refer in the first place to the cues—by which you may find the best, cheapest and most popular clothing house in town—Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

In the second place, we simply ask that you will excuse the suggestion that if you are in need of [illegible] boys' clothing, [illegible] riety and [illegible] purchasing at Kent & Miller's.

Finally, as winter comes on space, you will undoubtedly need a fine corkscrew overcoat, and it is not too much to say that not only this but all varieties of material may be found in their highest excellence at the popular clothing house of Kent & Miller, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

The store on Oneida street in the Nelson block, vacated by J. J. Wright, is soon to be opened by George Perkins of this village as a liquor store.

Thursday, Nov. 26th, occurs the party at the Palermo Centre house, given by W. H. Hannan. A splendid time is promised to all who attend.

A "pound party" was given for the benefit of Mrs. M. Cullivan, an aged widow living in the north end of the village. A large amount of comforts and necessaries of life were given the old lady.

Hon. Willard Johnson went to New York Monday night to be present at a meeting of the directors of the R. W. & O. railroad company, to perfect satisfactory arrangements with the S. P. & O. company, for the control of that road.

The indictment found against John D. Spencer of Mexico, charging him with grand larceny in the second degree, will not come to trial this term. The defendand will be held for the next term of court on the same bail which has been already furnished.

N. L. Stay of this village, has opened an oyster depot and lunch room in the basement of the block on Second street, north of Patterson's paint shop. Mr. Stay will keep on hand a full line of cigars and tobacco. Also oysters by the quart or gallon. He desires and deserves a share of the public patronage.

We are indebted to Mr. J. E. Cary of Cortland, for invications to the dedication exercises of the new rooms of Vesta Lodge, No 255, I. O. O. F., to be held in Cortland, Thursday Nov. 26. There will be a grand dedication ball in the evening.

The party in the opera house last evening given by company No. 1 of the Fire department, was very largely attended and was a complete success. Several visiting firemen from Oswego were present. The proceeds, which were about $60.00, will be used by the boys to finish fitting up their rooms.

The present term at Union school, No. 2, from all accounts seems to be one of prosperity. The attendance is large and regular. The students generally evince a desire to attain rapid and thorough advancement in their studies. Prof. Farnham and his assistants are to be congratulated on their success, which we hope will continue.

W. E. Landon, the operator in the N. Y., O. & W. station in this village for the past summer, has secured a position on the elevated road in New York, and leaves for that city the latter part of this week. During his residence here, Mr. Landon has made many friends, who, while regretting his departure, will be pleased at his good fortune. THE TIMES wishes him success.

The new Stephens block on Oneida street is now completed and ready for occupancy. J. J. [illegible] edge of the tow path, but fears that she was drowned, and while he was feeling along in the water with a spear, assisted in his search by officers Curtis and Poole, word was brought from the lock below that her body had been recovered. A curious coincidence about the unfortunate affair was the fact that the boat which was in the lock at the time she was found was owned by a brother-in-law of the deceased. Her sister was on the boat as cook. It has been thought by some that while she was standing near the canal the boat came around the bend and she was thrown in by the tow line and dragged to the lock. The verdict returned by the jury was that "deceased came to her death by accidental drowning in the Oswego canal. The funeral services were held yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Goodyear officiating. The remains were interred in Mt. Adnah.

George Martin's Mistake.

A short time ago Mrs. Richardson of this village, a widow with two children, married a man named George Martin, who, it was said, had another wife living in Canada. Mrs. Richardson says that Martin claimed that his first wife had married again, thus freeing him. Believing this assertion, they were married. The other day Mrs. Martin No. 1 of Gananoque, arrived in town having read in the papers of her husband's marriage. Immediately after her arrival Martin disappeared and is said to have gone to Wisconsin. Mrs. Martin denies the story of her second marriage. Martin's friends claim that he is able to show that if he has committed any offense it was solely through ignorance. They assert that he honestly believed he was legally divorced from his first wife and that she had no legal claim upon him.

Marital.

Last Thursday Miss Mary Gilmour, daughter of James Gilmour of this village and Mr. Robert J. Landon of Schnectady were married at the residence of the bride's uncle in that city. Mrs. James Gilmour and son and Mr. and Mrs. F. D. VanWagnen of this place, were in attendance at the wedding.

There is considerable excitement in Baldwinsville over the alleged appearance of a ghost in the vicinity of the skating rink and on the river bridge. The object came to gaze in the form of a woman in a plaid shawl and sun-bonnet. There is suspicion that the masquerader is a well known male resident of the village.

Michael Pikorska of Clay, Onondaga county was fatally stabbed in the neck last Sunday by a man named Hallock. A woman was the cause of the quarrel. The murderer has been arrested.

One bottle of Austen's Celebrated Cologne will be given away with every dollars worth of goods purchased at the Boston Bazaar next Saturday.

Owen Rafferty Shot.

Last Friday evening Owen Rafferty of Geddes, formerly of this village, was shot in a saloon by a man named O'Brien. It appears that just prior to the shooting the two men had had some difficulty, during which Rafferty threw O'Brien in the ditch. O'Brien went home and after procuring a revolver, followed Rafferty into the saloon. Approaching him from behind, he shot him twice, one ball taking effect in his right leg above the knee joint and the other entering near the left shoulder and passed in a downward direction, where it lodged just beneath the skin. The doctor thought the bullet had touched the lungs. O'Brien was locked up in the station house and Rafferty taken to St. Joseph's hospital, where he lies in a precarious condition.

Later reports are to the effect that Rafferty will probably recover. He is well known in Fulton and was thought to be quiet and good natured, but was ever ready to resent any offense with his fists. Rafferty is a brother of the canal boat captain who was injured at Cohoes last Wednesday night in a fight with the crew of another boat, and intended to leave for Troy the night he was shot.

Oswego Valley Stone Quarry.

The fine quality of the brown stone which is being quarried on the farm of O. J. Jennings, a mile below Fulton, has attracted wide attention by architects, builders and others. Last spring Messrs. Crabtree and Faulkner of this city leased for a term of years this quarry, and have been very successful in the sale of stone, particularly in the Western cities. They have lately received flattering offers from Foster & Clough, representing a syndicate of all the owners of the Ohio stone quarries for their lease and improvements. The latter will on Monday commence prospecting, with the aid of a steam drill. Should the quality of stone continue for a reasonable depth they will close a bargain for the entire quarry and will operate it in a manner commensurate with their vast resources. Captain Jennings is said to have a mine of wealth lying under the surface of his untilled acres.—[Syracuse Standard.

Come Again.

Frank Jones made his first appearance in Fulton as "Si Perkins," last Friday evening and was greeted by the largest house thus far this season although the weather was rather inclement. The play is a good one and shows up Jones as a clever comedian. Alice Montague, as Zana, the gypsy waif, ably assisted him. His support is good throughout. We gladly say, come again, Si.

The case of Cornelius Murphy of this village, which was tried before U. S. Mr. Murphy has informed us that Commissioner Getty has since discharged him, fully exhonorated from the charge.

W. G. Gage & Co. have completed the system of piping in their mill for protection from fire. Upon the top of the mill is a network of pipes with which the entire exterior of the mill can be kept dripping with water and upon every floor is a system of piping so arranged that in case of a fire that the immediate vicinity would be flooded. The system is to be connected with the water works main and it is so arranged that should that supply be inadequate, the pipes could be instantly connected with their powerful force pump, which will furnish an inexhaustible supply. A fire would stand a very poor show in this mill.

The Riverside and Oswego Mills of Oswego Falls are making some important improvements in the river near their headgates. Eight cribs have been sunk in the river south of the mills. To construct these cribs 76,000 feet of pine timber and 6,000 feet of oak were required. For a number of years the company have been troubled by the ice which would become packed in the head gates and shut off their water supply, necessitating the shutting down of the mills. These cribs are intended to obviate this difficulty and also to enable the channel to be deepened eventually. The cribs are anchored in their places and then stone is brought by boat and the crib is filled and sunk. Thomas Roxbury of Oswego is superintending the work and employs twenty-two men.

In the last issue of the Patriot appears an account of the Benefit concert by an unknown(?) writer. We try to hold charitable thoughts toward all persons, but in this instance are forced to believe that the writer labored hard to conceal his ill humor and to show a vast amount of egoism in a resume of the entertainment that pretends to be fair—a thankless and meritless task. A few of our young people made a brave attempt to be of service to one who is struggling hard to overcome serious obstacles. They held out to the public that they would give a benefit concert, and its purpose. The people heartily endorsed their efforts, as was attested by the very large audience present. They gave the concert and judging the performance as it should be judged, and as the performers held it out to be judged—an amateur performance for a worthy purpose—we say that there was not a number on the whole programme that was not good; and further, that there was not an individual performer whose work was not done well. Every one who took part in the entertainment is deserving of praise. We but speak the sentiments of the community when we say that work for any such purpose should be encouraged. It certainly was an unjust time for caviling criticism. There should be only encouragement for the performers and we trust that those who are so deserving will pay little heed to what seems to be the overflowing spleen of an uncharitable nature.

Teachers Institute.

By circular from the State Supt. we are directed to say to Trustees and teachers that in accordance with the spirit of the law passed May 27th 1885, it becomes necessary for each and every school in each of the Districts of Oswego county to be closed during the entire week of the Institute held at Fulton, Nov. 30, to Dec. 5, 1885, and that all teachers be present in order to receive the benefit named by that law of the public money. This notice is published as it is the decision of Hon. Wm. B. Ruggles, Supt. of Public Institution, that the attendance of a part of the session only does not comply with the statute. Every teacher must therefore be registered on Monday, the 30, and remain during the entire session.

Cues, Excuse and Corkscrews.

Don't think we refer to pool, billiards or champagne. If you do it will be a great mistake.

On the contrary, we refer in the first place to the cues—by which you may find the best, cheapest and most popular clothing house in town—Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

In the second place, we simply ask that you will excuse the suggestion that if you are in need of men's, youths' or boys' clothing—quantity, quality, variety and economy are all subserved by purchasing at Kent & Miller's.

Finally, as winter comes on apace, you will undoubtedly need a fine corkscrew overcoat, and it is not too much to say that not only this but all varieties of material may be found in their highest excellence at the popular clothing house of Kent & Miller, 18 and 20 South Salina street.

John Morway's new fire-proof, iron smoke house is completed and he is prepared to smoke hams, etc., in a manner to please the most exacting person. The goods cannot freeze. w1.

The present term at Union school, No. 2, from all accounts seems to be one of prosperity. The attendance is large and regular. The students generally evince a desire to attain rapid and thorough advancement in their studies. The [illegible] Company, which [illegible]

[illegible] Phile Smith, [illegible] J. T. Cole. The [illegible] by the jury and the inquest adjourned. The body was then taken to the [illegible].

At the inquest, which was held Monday night, it was disclosed that about twelve o'clock Saturday night the deceased had finished mopping out a portion of the cabin which immediately joins the canal, and while rinsing the mop in the canal, as she has been in the habit of doing, she lost her balance and fell in, and was carried by a passing boat to the lock where she was found. There was an absurd rumor circulated Monday to the effect that when found her hands had been tied. At the inquest it was proven that Saturday she cut her left thumb quite seriously, and had tied it up with a cloth and a string, which had been fastened around her wrist. She had been missed for some time before she was found, and her husband knowing her habit of going near the edge of the tow path, had fears that she was drowned, and while he was feeling along in the water with a spear, assisted in his search by officers Curtis and Poole, word was brought from the lock below that her body had been recovered. A curious coincidence about the unfortunate affair was the fact that the boat which was in the lock at the time she was found was owned by a brother-in-law of the deceased. Her sister was on the boat as cook. It has been thought by some that while she was standing near the canal the boat came around the bend and she was thrown in by the tow line and dragged to the lock. The verdict returned by the jury was that "deceased came to her death by accidental drowning in the Oswego canal. The funeral services were held yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, Rev. Mr. Goodyear officiating. The remains were interred in Mt. Adnah.

George Martin's Mistake.

A short time ago Mrs. Richardson of this village, a widow with two children, married a man named George Martin, who, it was said, had another wife living in Canada. Mrs. Richardson says that Martin claimed that his first wife had married again, thus freeing him. Believing this assertion, they were married. The other day Mrs. Martin No. 1 of Gananoque, arrived in town having read in the papers of her husband's marriage. Immediately after her arrival Martin disappeared and is said to have gone to Wisconsin. Mrs. Martin denies the story of her second marriage. Martin's friends claim that he is able to show that if he has committed any offense it was solely through ignorance. They assert that he honestly believed he was legally divorced from his first wife and that she had no legal claim upon him.

Marital.

Last Thursday Miss Mary Gilmour, daughter of James Gilmour of this village and Mr. Robert J. Landon of Schnectady were married at the residence of the bride's uncle in that city. Mrs. James Gilmour and son and Mr. and Mrs. F. D. VanWagnen of this place, were in attendance at the wedding.

There is considerable excitement in Baldwinsville over the alleged appearance of a ghost in the vicinity of the skating rink and on the river bridge. [illegible] known to leave [illegible] a well.

It is claimed that the sugar beet in California does not exhaust the soil. A [illegible] reports raising on his ground from fourteen to twenty-nine tons per acre in four years, planting on the same ground each year without fertilizers.

To clear out rats put crystals of copperas in every rat hole and scatter some about the corners of the places where they trouble. This is greatly preferable to poison, which often leaves them dead between walls and in their holes.

A certain farmer, says an exchange, observed that some apple trees that had been dressed with leached wood ashes bore apples which kept all winter without rotting, while the rest of the fruit rotted badly. His trees were infested with apple tree blight. He finally applied wood ashes at the rate of 200 bushels to the acre and washed the bodies of his trees with lye. The orchard recovered from the blight and apples would then keep well in the ordinary cellar all winter.

Carrying Out His Orders.

Hugh McGuire, a son of the Emerald Isle, who had volunteered in the Tenth Mississippi Regiment of Infantry, stationed at Pensacola, Florida, in 1861, was placed upon picket one night on the beach, with orders to walk between two points, and to allow no one to pass without the countersign and that to be given in a whisper. About midnight the corporal with the relief discovered, by the moonlight, Hugh up to his waist in water, the tide having set in since he was posted two hours before.

"Who goes there?"

"Relief."

"Halt, relief; advance corporal, and give the countersign."

Corporal—"I'm not going in there to be drowned. Come out here and let me relieve you."

Hugh—"Divil a bit I will. The Liftenant towld me not to lave my post."

Corporal—"Well, then, I'll leave you in the water all night," going away as he spoke.

Hugh—"Halt! I'll put a hole in ye if ye pass without the countersigh. Them's me orders from the Liftenant," cocking and leveling his gun.

Corporal—"Confound you, everybody will hear it if I bawl it out to you."

Hugh—"Yes, me darlin, and the Liftenant said it must be given in a whisper; in wid ye. Me finger's on the trigger and me gun may go off."

The corporal had to yield and wade in to the faithful sentinel, who exclaimed: "Be jabers! it's well ye're come; the coulterin' tide has almost drowned me."—[Detroit Free Press.

Citizen to country editor: A pleasant little affair occurred last night at my house, which terminated in the marriage of my daughter. Would you like the particulars?

Country Editor: Well-er, I might make a short mention of the matter, but we are badly cramped for space.

A little later. Another Citizen. My wife ran away last night with another man. Do you want the particulars?

Country Editor, eagerly: Yes, yes; give me the whole business.—[N. Y. Journalist.

Catarrh

Is a prevalent and exceedingly disagreeable disease, liable, if neglected, to develop into serious consumption. Being a constitutional disease it requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, acting through the blood, reaches every part of the system, effecting a radical and permanent cure of catarrh in even the most severe forms. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Bitter Bark Bitters [illegible]

[illegible] in this year. I am positively [illegible] to my mind. [illegible]

After we got home and were dressing [illegible] for dinner, a sudden exclamation from my friend arrested my attention.

"Clara! Oh! Clara!" she cried, "I've solved the mystery. Look here," and whipped out a copy of the Police Gazette from her bustle. "That's some of brother Jack's horrid literature. How blind I must have been! I am so careful always, pretty nearly to select a copy of the Christian Union to put into my bustle when I am going to church. Then I seem, somehow, to get an ease of soul from the services, that is due in some degree to what I am sitting on. But to rest on a Police Gazette! No wonder the religious exercises went for worse than nothing."

A Woman's Wrath.

A fair but frail daughter of Eve in a Western city recently was sentenced to thirty days in prison and to pay a fine of fifty dollars for drunkenness. When she heard the sentence she hurled a heavy inkstand at the judge's head. He dodged and the missile flew through the window and fell to the pavement, the ink splashing over a lady's elegant silk dress and totally ruining it. The lady, in trying to shake the ink from her raiment, frightened a team of spirited horses, that ran away with a carriage containing two ladies and a child, upsetting a fruit stand and throwing the ladies into a butcher cart, while the child was fastened in a bunch of telegraph wires about ten feet above the sidewalk. The team could not be stopped, and continued on their flight, finally plunging through the plate glass windows of a china shop. They ran through the entire length of the store, spreading destruction and devastation on every hand, ran out of the back door, leaped into the canal and were drowned. Now they talk of calling on the judge for damages because he dodged the inkstand.—[N. Y. Dispatch.

Randall Had to Come Down.

The following story is told of James R. Randall, editor of the Augusta, Ga., Chronicle: He attended one day a colored church in the country, and had in his pocket a silver half dollar, just the fare back to Augusta. At the conclusion of his sermon the minister ordered a collection for his own benefit. "Of course," said he, "I s'pects every pusson to give somethin'; but I'se told dat Mr. Thomas, up de land yonder, had some turkeys stole Friday night. I don't want any man who had a han' in stealin' dem turkeys to put any money in de plate." When the plate reached Mr. Randall not a man had refused to contribute, and the preacher's eyes were on him. His half-dollar accordingly went into the plate.

A cold of unusual severity which I took last autumn developed into a difficulty decidedly catarrhal in all its characteristics, threatening a return of my old chronic malady, catarrh. One bottle of Ely's Cream Balm completely eradicated every symptom of that painful and prevailing disorder.—E. W. Warner, 165 Hudson St., Rochester.

Catarrh. For twenty years I was a a sufferer from catarrh of the head and throat. By a few applications of Ely's Cream Balm I received decided benefit—was cured by one bottle.—Charlotte Parker, Waverly, N. Y.

The Washington Star has an article on the amount of money that Mr. Tilden has paid out of his own pocket to the Democratic party during the past two decades. The sting of the presidential bee has cost him dearly. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the figures at which it is estimated. Last year his contributions was only $15,000, but in 1876 he spent $360,000, and in 1880, when he should have had the nomination himself, he gave $52,000 to the support of Hancock and English.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

W. W. Reed, druggist of Winchester, Ind., writes: "One of my customers, Mrs. Louisa Pike, Bartonia, Randolph Co., Ind., was a long sufferer with Consumption, and was given up to die by her physicians. She heard of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and began buying it of me. In six month's time she walked to this city, a distance of six miles, and is now so much improved she has quit using it. She feels she owes her life to it." Free Trial Bottles at R. E. KIDNEY-WORT

SCROFULA

Usually develops in early life, and is a peculiar morbid condition of the system, usually affecting the glands, often resulting in swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, thickening of the lips, enlarged neck, sore eyes. A scrofulous condition is often hereditary, but bad diet, too free use of fat meats, bad air, want of sunshine and nourishing food will induce it. Some people are troubled with scrofulous swelling of the glands, and with ulcers and kernels, which may cause very little pain; others may have inward scrofula, scrofula of the lungs, scrofula of the spleen, scrofula of the kidneys, and scrofula of the bones. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will drive away any case of scrofula and not to appear in another place, for their action on the blood and bowels will carry the disease entirely from the body.

Clipped His Wings.

The exuberant style of young writers and the shock of the severe lesson that usually cures them make an amusing comedy together. The fellow who gets the lesson, however, does not appreciate the amusement. A fresh reporter tells how he was tamed down after his first flight of rhetoric.

Last night I was assigned to report a fire over on the west side, and I wrote it up in grand style, made half a column article of it. I began in this way:

"Suddenly on the still night air rang the shrill cry of fire, and at the same moment the little licking tongues of flame, whose light played along the roof's edge, had caught the eye of the midnight watcher, leaping forth, no longer played, but fierce and angry in its thirst and greed. Like glowing, snaky demons the lurid links entwined the doomed building; in venomous hisses and spirits the flames shot into the overhanging darkness, while from every window and door poured forth a dense, sulphurous smoke, the deadly, suffocating breath of an imprisoned fiend."

"I went on in that style for over half a column," said the reporter, "and this is what showed up in the paper this morning."

"Pat Sheeney's grocery was destroyed by fire last night: $250; uninsured."

Physical Health.

Physical health is the sole foundation of abiding beauty in women, and the duty in cultivating it is a wholesome text to be elaborated and expounded, even from the pulpit. Nevertheless it will strike the average mortal that Rev. John W. Shudder, of Minneapolis, places the standard of athletic capability at slightly too high a notch when he says: "A milk-white complexion may be artistic, but is also a sign of weak blood. Give me the nut-brown girl who abandons her sun-bonnet; who can climb a tree with any boy, who prefers good bread to chocolate caramels, and baked beans to angel cake. The kind of an angel for me weighs 140 pounds." The estimation in which he holds baked beans may flatter the abnormal sensibilities of the Bostonese, but even they will draw a line at tree climbing.—[Our Society Journal.

Never Again.

Never again will the roses blow
For us as the roses we used to know.
Oh! never again will the wide sky hold
Such wealth of glory and sunset gold;
And never again will I whisper, dear,
The pleasant fancies you used to hear,
And never again at the day's decline,
Shall I sit with your little hand in mine,
And look at the beauty of sunset skies,
And the sweeter beauty of your sweet eyes.
Never again! for the dream is done
That a look, and a word, and a touch begun.
Love, if we always could dream, ah, then!
The words are as sad as "it might have been!"
For us, there is nothing but memory,
In the coming years, of what could not be!
Love, you are near me, and yet as far
As the round earth is from the fatherest star.
Kiss me and smile in my eyes once more,
Tho' your lips should quiver, and tears run o'er.
Put your hand in mine for one moment, one,
And then good-bye, for the dream is done!

WORTHY OF LOVE.

"And how is that you are not a Benedict, yet, Hal? You certainly are not a bad match as the world goes, either personally or professionally, said Arthur Dane, with a lazy glance of approval at his friend. "But perhaps you are the fastidious one—eh?"

Harry Judson and Arthur Dane were old friends and college chums. The latter, after spending several successful years abroad, had returned to find the slim, thoughtful student changed into a stalwart man, with an M. D. attached to his name, and a good practice growing up about him.

"In that respect," replied Dr. Judson, in answer to his friend's remark, "you will find me the same as when we parted ten years ago, Of course I have had my fancies, but they never developed into facts. The truth is, it is difficult to find a true woman, such as our wives should be."

"Whew!" exclaimed Arthur; "what would the fair daughters of Ridgway say to such a sweeping denunciation as that?"

"It may be my obtuseness, but as far as my observation goes, there are two chief classes of women in this town—the wealthy, who make a display of their money and their accomplishments, whether real or pretended, who have no idea of any higher or other life that a useless one; and the second class, who try to appear as well off as the others, starve themselves for the sake of appearances, and are covered with confusion if caught in a calico dress, or doing any of the househould duties which a woman should understand and be proud of her knowledge. I am beginning to think, though, that there is one exception," he added, after a pause.

"Ah, I thought so," murmured Arthur under his breath. "And she is?" he asked aloud.

"You doubtless remember Helen French?"

"Surely you cannot mean that gay girl of whose brilliancy and conquests I have heard so much?"

"The same. The recent death of her father has left herself and her mother nearly penniless, and the latter an invalid; but since their affliction Helen is displaying traits of character which I never dreamed that she possessed. Her devotion to her mother is beautiful."

"Glad to hear it," said Arthur heartily. "And I hope you will never have any reason to change your opinion of her.

The same day Dr. Judson called upon Mrs. French professionally.

As he was leaving Helen met him in the hall with an anxious face.

"You find her no better, doctor?" Tell me truly what you think. Is there nothing that will help her?"

Harry looked down sympathetically into the appealing dark eyes.

"Yes, Miss French," he said slowly, "there is one course which would probably restore her completely."

"And that!" she asked eagerly.

"Your mother needs something more than medicine. Perfect rest of mind and body and change of air—say a few weeks at some quiet seashore town—would benefit her wonderfully."

"You are quite certain of this?"

"I am positive. It might be the means of saving her life."

"Then she shall go," she said quietly.

The next time Dr. Judson called he found Mrs. French on the point of departing upon her journey, one of her former servants bustling about her.

"You see I have a new nurse," she said, smilingly.

"Where is Miss French?" he inquired.

"Oh, she went away yesterday to visit some friends."

"Gone away!" Harry repeated blankly.

"Yes; it would be altogether too quiet for her at the place where I am going, and the poor child must have some recreation. I dare say Nancy will take good care of me," Mrs. French replied, with a little regretful sigh.

Feeling too surprised and vexed to pursue the subject, Dr. Judson, after a few parting directions, took his leave. He would scarcely acknowledge even to himself the disappointment and pain he felt at Miss French's strange course.

"But I might have expected it," he said bitterly. "Her affectation of concern for her mother certainly seemed genuine, but this desertion at such a time shows how utterly heartless she is."

And very regretfully he viewed the ruins of the air castles which he had already begun almost unconsciously to build.

The long sultry days of August came, and Dr. Judson, from too close application to his profession, found himself in a condition which demanded rest, so one day he packed his valise and started off for a two week's vacation.

[illegible] sunset he reached his destination, not a fashionable resort, but a quiet place among the hills, a hospitable [illegible] airy dining-room, where the family and boarders were already assembled for tea.

As he seated himself at one of the tables someone approached him. He glanced up and to his great surprise met the quiet eyes of Helen French.

He would have risen, but she motioned him to remain seated.

"Good evening, Dr. Judson," she said calmly. "Will you take a cup of tea or chocolate?"

He never knew just what response he made as he dropped back into his chair and stared at Helen's retreating figure.

When she returned, the faintest trace of emotion, whether pleasurable or otherwise he could not tell, tinted her face and shook her hand when she set down his cup.

"How is your mother?" he asked.

"Better, thank you," she replied briefly; suddenly discovering that her services were required in another part of the room.

Dr. Judson's appetite seemed to have deserted him, and after barely tasting the good things before him, he left the table and went out upon the cool piazza in a very confused frame of mind.

Why was she here and in such a position? Either Mrs. French had deceived him, or was herself deceived. The more he tried to solve the matter the more vexatious and puzzling it grew. All the evening he haunted the piazza, and lawn and parlors, but the object of his waiting was invisible. The next morning at breakfast he found Helen again in the dining-room. She waited upon him cooly, but gave him no opportunity for anything more than a brief "Good morning."

So it continued for several days, until Dr. Judson's anxiety and suspense seemed almost unbearable. Helen certainly avoided him. The only opportunity he had of seeing her was in the dining-room, moving swiftly but quietly about her duties. It seemed that she had never possessed such a charm for him as at present, dressed in pretty cambrics, with a dainty white apron, and her abundant dark hair coiled low at her neck. The third evening, just after sunset, Harry found himself coming slowly homeward from a long ramble. A narrow woodland path lay before him, the dense foliage making almost twilight. His mind was abstracted, filled with the one subject which perplexed him so, until strolling on, the sudden gleam of a white dress ahead arrested his attention and a closer glance sent him striding on at a faster gait.

"May I walk back with you, Miss French?"

She turned, rather surprised, but smiling.

"If you care to keep pace with my laggard step," she replied.

"You are tired, I know," he said. "It is a long walk to the postoffice," noticing the letters in her hand.

"Yes, but good news always repays one for a little fatigue. I know you will be pleased to hear that my mother's health is improving rapidly."

"I am indeed heartily glad. I saw her last when on the eve of her departure. She told me that you had started on a visit to some fashionable friends.

Helen returned his half inquiring look steadily.

They had now reached the house, and no one being in the parlor, continued their conversation there.

"I suppose I ought to give you an explanation of that error," she said, "or you will imagine that either mamma or I have deceived you. I am the deceitful one, Dr. Judson, and yet I don't like to tell you how," she continued, flushing. But please consider it a professional secret. That day you told me how necessary to mamma's recovery a few weeks at the seashore would be, I decidthat she should have it, although I did not know then just how, but I suddenly thought of this place where our family used to pass so many happy summers, and wrote to Mrs. Mills, frankly explaining our circumstances, and asking if she could give me employment which would pay the expenses of my mother's trip. In reply she kindly offered me my present position, which I gladly accepted. I knew mamma would never consent to the plan, so have kept her ignorant of it. She believes I am spending a happy summer with friends, and—so I am,' she added, smiling bravely through the tears which stood in her eyes.

She met answering drops in the other eyes looking down into her own.

"Miss French—Helen, you are one of God's noble women!" Harry exclaimed warmly. "I cannot express my reverence and admiration for you.

"I do not deserve such praise," she answered simply. "This is only the beginning of the struggle——"

"It shall be the end, Helen," he interrupted, "if you will trust yourself and your mother to my care. I love you so dearly—how dearly it shall be the aim of my life to show you. Won't you let me try, Helen?"

And for answer she went straight into the strong arms held out so appealingly to her.

THE FIRST KEEN TWINGE.

As the season advances, the pains and aches by which rheumatism makes itself known, are experienced after every exposure. It is not claimed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is a specific for rheumatism—we doubt if there is, or can be, such a remedy. But the thousands benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla, warrant us in urging others who suffer from [illegible]

Whence and Whither?

In a remote corner of the Congressional Cemetery recently a small group of people, with uncovered heads, ranged around a newly opened grave. They included Detective and Mrs. George O. Miller and family and friends, who had gathered to witness the burial of Mr. Miller's bright little son Harry, a recent victim of diphtheria. As the casket rested upon the trestles there was a painful pause, broken only by the mother's sobs. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, a friend of the Millers, attended the funeral at their request. He shook his head when the undertaker first addressed him, and then said suddenly: "Does Mr. Miller desire it?" The undertaker gave an affirmative nod, Mr. Miller looked appealingly toward the noted orator, and then hastily. Col. Ingersoll advanced to the side of the grave, made a motion denoting a desire for silence, and in a voice of exquisite cadence, delivered one of his characteristic eulogies for the dead. A fine drizzling rain was falling, and every head was bent and every ear turned to catch the impassioned words of eloquence and hope that fell from the lips of the distinguished speaker. Col. Ingersoll was unprotected by either hat or umbrella, and his invocation thrilled his hearers with awe, each eye that had previously been bedimmed with tears brightening, and sobs becoming hushed. Col. Ingersoll said:

"MY FRIENDS: I know how vain it is to gild a grief with words, and yet I wish to take from every grave its fear. Here in this world, where life and death are equal kings, all should be brave enough to meet what all the dead have met. The future has been filled with fear, stained and polluted by the heartless past. From the wondrous tree of life the buds and blossoms fall with ripened fruit, and in the common bed of earth the patriarchs and babes sleep side by side. Why should we fear that which will come to all that is? We cannot tell, we do not know, which is the greater blessing—life or death. We cannot say that death is not a good. We do not know whether the grave is the end of this life or the door of another, or whether the night here is not somewhere else a dawn. Neither can we tell which is the more fortunate—the child dying in its mother's arms, before its lips have learned to form a word, or he who journeys all the length of life's uneven road, painfully taking the last slow steps with staff and crutch.

"Every cradle asks us 'Whence?' and every coffin, 'Whither?' The poor barbarian, weeping above his dead, can answer these questions as intelligently and satisfactorily as the robed priest of the most authentic creed. The tearful ignorance of the one is just as consoling as the learned and unmeaning words of the other. No man, standing where the horizon of a life has touched a grave, has any right to prophesy a future filled with pain and tears. It may be that death gives all there is of worth to life. If those we press and strain against our hearts could never die, perhaps that love would wither from the earth. Maybe this common fate treads from out the paths between our hearts the weeds of selfishness and hate, and I had rather live and love where death is king, than have eternal life where love is not Another life is naught unless we know and love again the ones who love us here.

"They who stand with breaking hearts around this little grave need have no fear. The larger and the nobler faith in all that is and is to be tells us that death, even at its worst, is only perfect rest. We know that through the common wants of life—the needs and duties of each hour—their grief will lesson day by day, until at last this grave will be to them a place of rest and peace—almost of joy. There is for them this consolation: the dead do not suffer. If they live again their lives will surely be as good as ours.

"We have no fear. We are all children of the same mother, and the same fate awaits us all. We, too, have our religion, and it is this: Help for the living—Hope for the dead."—[Washington Post.

UNDER THE GALLOWS.

Frightful Condemnation of a Mother by Her Son—What Does it Mean?

Not long ago a weeping mother called to bid good bye to her only son who was soon to be executed.

"Woman," he exclaimed in a momentary frenzy. "Woman, I would never "have been here had you done your du-"ty by me when I was young!"

This was a terrible parting! It horrified the spectators, it nearly crazed the conscience striken mother.

One can scarcely overestimate the mother's influence in the moulding of the character of her offspring. But how often, oh, how often, do mothers seem to ignore this responsibility!

During a recent trip on the rail the writer made the acquaintance of Dr. A. J. Benedict, of Sackett's Harbor, N. Y., a person who has made a study of human development. Referring to the murderous tendency of the times, we asked that eminent man if the outlook was not discouraging?

"It looks so," he said, "but I fancy we have a cause and the remedy for such evils. In my professional career I have found by hard study that we have emerged from savagery by development of the nervous system and the intellectual life, and we return to savagery as we ignore the fact that without the solid, trustworthy nervous system, we cannot hope to save the race. Boys stuff dime novels, and the pistol is to them the only glorious instrument to secure fame. Women read trashy literature and straightway try to murder their husbands and friends by poison. Business men yield to the tempter, and forge and steal and default. Ministers, charmed by beauty, forget the behests of conscience. On every side we see the weakness of personal integrity."

"No you regard it as a disease?"

"More especially as the result of disease which, however, may be prevented."

"Please define how."

"I cannot now enter into details. Our people can see their bodies, their blood, their bones. They never see their nerves and consequently many do not believe they have any. The farmer's wife rojoices in a big, physical frame, and yet she dies prematurely. The nerve cannot stand the strain of continual work. The minister falls dead in his pulpit, but he never did a day's physical work in his life. The lawyer faints in the presence of the court and is soon a wreck or a corpse, and yet the work is nerve work. The man of affairs is overcome with apoplexy; the politician and publicist, with Bright's disease. The mind of the untutored man is fired by the exploits of crime and he longs for such fame. These persons overwork or over-excite the nervous system and this fact kills or demoralizes them."

"If all this be so how would you rectify it then?"

"Let me tell you. A few years ago I had a lady patient who was an utter wreck. She was the mother of several children. She lost her mind and imagined she was cursed of God. She was a farmer's wife, and worked early and late. I never saw a finer specimen of physical womanhood than she, but she was a nervous wreck! She became bloodless, had the very worst of female disorders and was in the last stages of albuminuria or Bright's disease. This latter disease works particular havoc with the nervous system and produces insanity and despair. She was insane and desperate and I fear tainted the blood of her offspring with these terrible tendencies. I treated her for several years. One by one the standard remedies of the schools failed, but I finally cured her with Warner's safe cure, and she is today strong and well. Yet thousands of women like her, every year bring ill-formed and criminally-inclined children into the world. Is it any wonder that nervous diseases prevail and that the whole moral sense is demoralized? If that remedy were generally used, we would have stronger mothers, stronger children, stronger men and women, and with perfect physical and mental health, crime would decrease and society be more secure."

Such candid opinions are surely worth considering.

THE BEST
[illegible] Gen. U. S. GRANT [illegible]

THE WORLD'S HOSTILITY TO CLEVELAND.

Editor Williams of the Whitehall Times, is a man who possesses an enviable disposition. He has sufficient reason to feel a little hostile toward the administration, inasmuch as he was an aspirant to a collectorship in his district and President Cleveland passed him by and appointed Samuel J. Tilden jr., to the office. Brother Williams worked hard for the election of Cleveland and was deserving of recognation. However, it would seem that the nature of the editor, over-rides his feelings of disappointment from the fact that there appears in the last issue of his bright paper a vigorous, double-leaded leader, in which he denounces the New York World for its daily malicious attacks on the President. The Times here makes known for the first time, the cause of the World's sudden "flop." It seems that Mr, Pulitzer, was very desirous that President Cleveland should appoint his friend, Chas. Gibson of St. Louis as Minister to Berlin. Mr. Cleveland thought best to appoint Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton of Ohio. This, the Times asserts is the true reason of the present attitude of the World toward the administration. Merely a personal matter. The Times says: "The rural Democracy are incensed at the World's course, for President Cleveland is giving the people of the United States an administration that bids fair to be one of the most remarkable and successful this people ever had." We admire the editor of the Whitehall Times for his noble stand in behalf of the administration, while he himself is smarting under recent disappointment, and trust that he may yet receive his just reward.

"For blessings ever wait on virtuous deeds,
And though a late, a sure reward succeeds."

CONDITION OF TRADE.

The general trade situation as telegraphed to Bradstreet's, last Saturday, shows less activity in some lines than was reported one week ago. This is particularly noticed in dry goods. The continuation of moderate weather at the west and north has seriously interfered with distribution of seasonable fabrics. The regular fall trade is over and orders received now are largely of the reassortment variety. Eastern jobbers and agents are shipping very moderately and complain of the delay in the arrival of steady cold weather. Prices are firm for all varieties except some lines of sheetings, which have been shaded. Wool is quiet and prices are firm, except for fine fleeces, owing to the relatively decreased demand. Low and medium grades are very strong. Transactions are not expected to increase much, so long as the outlook for the disposition of heavy weight goods is so uncertain. The movement of grocery staples has been fair with lower prices on coffee Dairy products are lower and depressed. There is less activity in pig and in manufactured irons. The prices of both are firm, but there has been no advance and there is now no likelihood of any during the current year. The advance in rails, which is very marked, is due in part to better demand, but very largely to manipulation. Old rails are scarce and higher, as is bessemer pig. Anthracite coal is less active, but is meeting a very full domestic demand.

THE King of Spain is dying.

THE small-pox epidemic in Montreal is slowly abating.

THE prospects for railroad construction in the next two years are said to be greater than any time in ten years.

REPUBLICAN Journals have highly commended President Cleveland for issuing a National Thanksgiving day proclamation.

THE election for the new British parliament began Monday. They will continue in boros during the week, and in counties will not be complete until December 10. Parnell claims that he will have 86 supporters in the new house.

WASHINGTON gossips state postively that all the officers of the House will be re-elected, and that Samuel Donelson of Tennessee, now an employee, will succeed the deceased Doorkeeper. In the Senate the officers all hold over and no change seems to be seriously thought of.

THE President is determined to punish those who were guilty of the recent outrages on the Chinese on the Pacific coast, and the prosecuting officers will be given instructions to endeavor to bring the offenders to justice. It is said that a clause has been found in the Civil Rights act applicable to the situation.

JOHN L. SULLINAN, the pugilist, has signed a contract with John Cannon of New York, under whose management he agrees to make a tour of Europe and Australia next year. He agrees to meet any man who may be brought against him at any time, under any circumstances, with or without gloves and under any rules.

EX-SENATOR SIMON CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, is the oldest United States Senator now living, not only as to the length of his Senatorial career, but as to the fullness of his years. He was a Senator when Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Cass, Benton and Silas Wright were there, and though he has passed his eighty-sixth birth-day, he is quite vigorous, with eyes undimmed and his natural forces unabated.

ONE of the funny things incidental to the President's public receptions is the number of persons who claim relationship. One woman, who shook hands with the President at the reception on Wednesday, told him that she was his cousin. "What name?" he asked, and when she answered he said, "No relation of mine." Then she tried to argue with him, but before she was through one sentence Mr. Cleveland remarked that he would take her word for it, and the ushers hurried her along and out of the door. The President has instructed them not to allow people to stand and talk with him on trivial subjects.

WILLIAM A. BEACH of Syracuse, has been appointed collector of internal revenue for the 21st district, in place of James Armstrong, who has held the office since the fall of 1881. The district is the largest in the State, embracing twenty counties, among which are Onondaga, Cortland, Madison, Oneida, Cayuga, Wayne, Oswego, Jefferson and St. Lawrence. In each of them counties Mr. Beach will have appointments. The district headquarters has heretofore always been located in Utica, but will [illegible] be removed to Syracuse [illegible]

[illegible] Kelly [illegible] his leadership of [illegible], and Charles E. Loew has been chosen as his successor.

BEN BUTLER, it is said, [illegible] Congress from a Massachusetts district next year. The old General is becoming restless sitting in the back pews. By the by, what is Butler now? Perhaps we shall have to define him as a Democratic Mugwump.—[Philadelphia Chronicle.

GEORGE H. STERLING of Brooklyn has been appointed port warden of the port of New York by governor Hill. Mr. Sterling is the Brooklyn alderman whose appointment as weigher in the New York custom house led to a civil service reform agitation and his after removal. He recently successfully passed a civil service examination for the same place, but Mr. O'Brien, an ex-soldier, passed higher and was given the position.

ONE week from next Monday, December 7, the first session of the forty-ninth congress will open at Washington. The senate will have a small republican majority; the house a good working democratic majority, the practical division being 184 democrats to 141 republicans. It is conceded that Mr. Carlisle of Kentucky will be re-elected speaker, Mr. Randall having decided to make no contest for the place.

The village of Oneida now has a population of 6,500.

Two bold theives at Rochester the other night threw a bobtail street car off the track with an obstruction, and while the driver was busied righting the car stole the money box, containing $8.

A project is on foot to form a vast shooting and fishing park in the mountains of Rockland and Orange counties. The membership fee will be $100 and the annual dues of each member the same sum. The park will embrace 6,000 acres and is very abundant in fish and game.

William S. Warner, Ferdinand Ward and J. Henry Work were indicted at New York on Monday by the United States Grand jury for conspiring to defraud the creditors and stock-holders of the Marine bank. Warrants were issued for the arrest of Warner and Work.

The board of supervisors are investigating the charges against Keeper Murphy, of the Cayuga county poor house. It is alleged that he illegally sold the bodies of dead paupers to medical students, and that he has cruelly beaten and kept in close confinement inmates of the poor house.

The Utica Herald says: A mineral spring with properties like those of the Deep Rock spring at Oswego has been struck in this city. Physicians and those who have knowledge of the properties of mineral waters, to whom the water has been submitted, say that it resemples the water of the Deep Rock Oswego county, spring, more nearly than any other, and that some of the ingredients are more positive to the taste.

COUNTY COMMENT.

Wm. Dean of Scriba left for Kansas City, Monday, on a visit.

The Ludington block in Parish which was burned a few years since is to be rebuilt at once.

N. J. Pendergast of Phœnix, shipped to New York last week, by boat, 7,000 bushels of potatoes.

The commission of Dr. Whited of Oswego, as pension examiner has been canceled. It is believed that Dr. Eddy will be appointed to fill the vacancy.

Robert Reed died at Oswego Thursday, aged 97. He was an English soldier in the battle of Waterloo. James Peet of Parish, who is nearly 100, fought under Napoleon.

The case of John E. Coe of Lycoming, who did not take down his post-office sign after he had been deposed, has been dismissed by the government.

The Sandy Creek Wood Manufacturin company is to have a capacity soon of turning out 50,000 wood plates daily.

Miss Alice Rice and Charles Bush of Pine, Jefferson county, were married at the residence of the bride's father in Central Square last Monday.

Capt. Thomas' novelty concert troupe held forth at the village hall in Central Square, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week for the benefit of the G. A. R. Post of that village.

Dr. Vine A. Allen died very suddenly at his home in Cleveland, Oswego county last Thursday, aged 75 years. He commenced to practice his profession in that village in 1836. Dr. Allen was a man of more than ordinary ability.

Rev. Father Griffa, for 18 years pastor of St. Mary's church, Oswego, has been directed to take charge of the church at Chatham, Columbia county. Father Griffa says several changes are about to be made by the bishop, and he was allowed to select from several parishes.

A Phœnix correspondent writes to the effect that the last village tax was exorbitant and that the last levy was nearly equal to the last town, county and state tax combined. The writer attributes the cause to the fact that the village has supported a "ring" of politicians the past few months. The condition of affairs has resulted in Justice Churchill directing the village Treasurer to stop paying orders.

A Pulaski correspondent writes: "A side track on the Rome and Oswego branch, commencing at the intersection of the Syracuse division and running some one hundred rods toward Sand Hill, is now in process of construction. This is a long needed improvement, and it [illegible]

While it is understood that the Democratic majority will [illegible] Mr. Carlisle Speaker, the Republicans will give the complimentary nomination to one of their brethren. As the member thus selected becomes the virtual leader of the minority, a certain interest centres in the coming action of the House Republican caucus.

Several names are mentioned for this honor. They are Messrs. Reed of Maine Hiscock of New York, Long of Massachusetts and McKinley of Ohio. The two former are really the only candidates, and it is thought that Mr. Reed will get the nomination. Being more aggressive and more courageous in the expression of his opinions than Mr. Hiscock, he is the natural leader of the Republican minority.

Mr. Reed is a ready, irrepressible talker, and spends a large part of his time in Congress on his feet, either in speaking or button-holing his confreres. He knows well how to utilize his own information, and he has a sarcastic style that is heightened by an exasperating coolness. Both he and Mr. Hiscock are men of experience, each having served several terms in the House. Hiscock is slow in his movements and methods. He does not speak often, and has no gift for shining in the running fire of an acrimonious debate. He is a rich man, and during the winter gives fine dinners.

The Republican leaders are all high-tariff advocates. All of the leaders of the Democratic side, with the exception of Mr. Randall, are pronounced revenue reformers. Therefore the battle in the House between protection and reform of the tariff, promises to be fought on strictly party lines.

There is so much complaint against the rules of the House of Representatives, that effort will be made early in the session to improve them. Congressman Springer says he has spent months in devising a set of rules that will facilitate legislation. Through the present rules the most positive will of the majority can be defeated by the minority, and the interests of the many subordinated to the schemes of a few. The average day in the House is devoted to the question "What shall we do to-day?" The gentleman from Illinois says his plan of revision opens the way for prompt transaction of business which meets the approval of a majority. He is willing to trust a majority of the representatives of the people.

The extent to which the Republican Senators will oppose the Administration in the matter of appointments will be determined by the caucus to be held in about a week. A Republican Senator remarked: "I do not believe in opposing the President because he is a Democrat. There are two things to be considered in an apointee whose name comes before the Senate for confirmation: "Is he an able man, and will he honestly and efficiently administer the affairs of his office." He did not think the question of politics should be considered. "Still," continued the Senator, "President Cleveland has introduced a new element in stating that he would remove no one except for offensive partisanship. To remove an offensive Republican and appoint an offensive Democrat in his place is, to my mind, inconsistent, and I shall take that question into consideration when appointments come up for confirmation. I will agree with the Administration when I can, and differ from it when I must."

The President is working hard day and night on his message to Congress, and annual reports are coming in from various branches of the Government. General Sheridan's report will be read with special interest, especially his treatment of the Indian question. He puts himself in accord with those who have contended for a humane policy. He advocates giving the Indians land in severalty as soon as possible, and takes the ground that the army is not the proper body to entrust permanently with the management of the redmen.

Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

There's frost in the air,
There's ice in the brooks,
And wild with excitement
Are housewives and cooks.
The seasoning is ready
To make the mince pie,
The turkey is slaughtered,
Thanksgiving is nigh.
Its coming we hail with
A shout and a cheer,
Because 'tis the happiest
Day of the year,
For sisters and brothers,
Who've long been away,
Come home to take dinner
On Thanksgiving day;
And this is the season

Through life, we are sure),
Are ready and generous

Something over a year ago the Salvation army captured this village and located headquarters in Church's hall, which place they have occupied to the present time. It was expected and even hoped by some, that at the expiration of the lease, the army would "break camp." Not so, however. They have renewed their lease for another year, agreeing to pay an advance in the rent of $5.00 per month. Let us hope that through their persistency in remaining among us, some good and lasting results may come of it.

The Phœnix Road.

A report was current from Phœnix Saturday that the Phœnix and Syracuse road had been sold to the R. W. & O. road for $160,000. Upon inquiry at headquarters it was found that no sale had taken place. A. A. Howlett said to a Syracuse Herald reporter Monday: "As one of the directors of the Phœnix road, I would say that there is nothing in the sale. In the first place, no sale or lease of a railroad can be consummated without the action of the board of directors. Now neither of these has been determined by our board."

Twentieth Anniversary.

Last Monday evening a large number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Stearns gathered at their home on Sixth street, the occasion being the twentieth anniversary of their wedding. A large number of valuable and useful presents were received, among the most noticable being a beautiful decorated tea set presented by Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Truman White, Mr. and Mrs. O. Sholtz, Mrs. Harry Comstock and sister and Elmer Hare. An elegant decorated china cup was presented by Master Harry Comstock. After a very pleasant evening the company departed wishing their host and hostess many happy returns.

Reward of Courtesy.

Jennie Jones is a pretty young lady residing at Highland, Ulster county. She is a dressmaker by trade, and one day about a year ago, while employed in New York, she befriended an old lady who had lost her pocketbook, by loaning her a small amount of money and also assisting her across the street, when the horse car in which she had met her came to the place where the old lady wished to alight. Miss Jones gave her name and place of residence to the old lady, at her request, and thought no more of it. A day or so ago Miss Jones received a letter from a lawyer in Buffalo which stated that by the death of an old lady in that city she was heiress to $50,000. The lady who bequeathed the money was the person whom Miss Jones had assisted a year ago.

Did Not Care to Testify.

During the hop picking season last fall Sarah Johnson, a young girl from Hastings Centre, Oswego county, made complaint against Henry Edson of Munsville, Madison county, charging him with criminally assaulting her. He was arrested and after examination was held to await the action of the grand jury. Shortly afterward the Johnson girl disappeared, and it was charged that the defendant or some of his friends had run the girl out of the country. When the grand jury met in October the girl could not be found. District Attorney Wilson presented the matter to the grand jury and indictments were found against several persons for assisting in keeping her away from the grand jury. A short time ago it was learned that she was in Kingston, Canada, with a young man by the name of Rice, one of the persons against whom the grand jury had found bills. Warrants were given to officer Stimpson of Canastota, and this week he succeeded in catching them both on this side of the line. He arrested them, and they are now in the county jail at Morrissville.

Ferdinand Ward's Scheme.

A friend of Ferdinand Ward is quoted by the Boston Herald as giving a reason why Ward is in prison. He had ample money and opportunity to go to a safe country after the exposure of his rascality. Several days of liberty elapsed after after the bursting of the Grant & Ward bubble before he was arrested, and then he was kept only in civil confinement, from which his escape was easy, until his conviction. Why, then, was it that the Napoleonic scoundrel did not retreat quietly from the Moscow of his ruin? "For the simple reason that he likes to live in New York," is the reply; "he knew that he could not get more than ten years, which term would be shortened by good conduct to about six and a half. He will be scarcely more than forty when he comes out, wealthy, full of schemes invented during his incarceration, and not ashamed of his great exploit. That suits him better than banishment for life."

Mr. Frank Reynolds delighted the audience with his excellently rendered humorous songs and recitals.

[illegible] between [illegible] up until the first of last May occupied the position of operator at the N. Y. O. & W. depot in this village. About that time he suddenly left town and when next heard from was in New York. During his residence here he boarded at the Clark house, and when he went away a bill of $27.00 remained unpaid. It was also rumored that he was guilty of several other irregularities, among them the embezzlement of some $300 from the railroad company, which loss station agent Johnson or his bondsmen were compelled to make good. Several weeks ago officer Poole, armed with a warrant sworn out by James Clark, went to New York to arrest the young man and bring him back to Fulton. It appears that Flint became aware of the officer's intentions, and made his escape. Poole left the warrant in the hands of the detectives with instructions to arrest Flint as soon as possible. The detectives have been ever since endeavoring to effect his arrest but each time he managed to elude them. They say Flint has given them more trouble than anyone for a long time. Last Thursday officer Pool received word that Flint had been arrested and to come and get him. Poole went to New York and returned Friday night with the young man and he was lodged in jail. Saturday he was arraigned before Police Justice VanWagenen on a charge of defrauding James Clark out of a board bill. He pleaded guilty and sentence was postponed until Monday, and he was remanded to jail. Sunday morning his two brothers came from New York and procured for counsel H. C. Howe. Monday afternoon Flint was brought before the justice and owing to some irregularity in the warrant he was discharged. He was immediately re-arrested on another warrant sworn out by Clark. He pleaded not guilty and demanded a jury trial, which was set down for Tuesday night. Another warrant was at once served upon him sworn out by E. E. Johnson, charging him with grand larceny in the second degree in embezzling the sum of $306.00 from the railroad company. At his examination he was held in the sum of $500 to await the action of the grand jury.

Since the above was written, Flint has settled the case with Clark by paying the bill.

"Iceberg Ira."

Congressman Davenport laughs not a little at the constant reiteration of the title of Iceberg Ira, which the Democratic press tacked onto him during the campaign. "It seems bound to follow me, he said with a hearty laugh, the day after he came back from Washington, "and the confounded weather clerk helped it along while I was in Washington. The morning I got there the signal service announced that the thermometer would fall during the day, and sure enough it went down twenty degrees in the next fifteen hours. Then the papers all had their little joke that the iceberg candidate had brought on a cold wave. It made me feel as if I could warm the jackets of some of the paragraphers, ice or no ice, But I suppose they must have a subject and that I am only taking my turn."—[Tribune Gossip.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.

Many persons—especially parents—object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's tonic does not involv this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor. 29m1

A boy named Albert Wells of Canandaigua was seized on a body execution for having shot Frank Dawson's dog and lodged in jail. The next day he was released on a habeas corpus. The boy's father brought suit against Dawson and his lawyer, Seward French, and has just recovered a verdict for $400 for false imprisonment.

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver, or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits. 29w3

Shelter the animals from cold storms.

Windows that lay down diffuse light better through stables than upright ones do.

Provide for the winter water supply of all live stock; they should have access to pure water at pleasure throughout the winter.

Sheep should have shelter to run under at all seasons. They need it during the long, cold rains of autumn fully as much as any other animal on the farm does.

Sheep want their salt about twice a week. They will take it a little oftener if given free access to it, but experience shows that twice a week regularly answers the purpose very well.

To make cattle depend upon pastures alone thus late in the season is to invite an impaired condition that will stand hard against their well-doing all through the coming winter. Some fodder and meal should also be fed.

The best way to wash butter is in the churn. When the butter comes draw off the buttermilk from below. Then pour in brine, and churn the butter in the brine for a few moments. Draw off the brine in the same manner as was done with the buttermilk, and the butter may be worked and laid aside.

Good farmers rarely sell off straw; it pays better to turn it into manure. There is a big difference in the size of the manure pile by spring, whether bedding is freely used otherwise. Besides the increase in manures, the matter of greater comfort and warmth to the animals by the use of plenty of warm, clean bedding is worth a good deal. We have observed that a sick animal that cannot be induced to lie down in any other way, will take to a bed of clean, bright straw. This shows that good bedding is appreciated by dumb animals.

Threshing Beans.

As far as possible beans should be thrown on scaffolds, or, if put in bays, spread thinly and not trampled. If beans heat in the mow they become musty and worthless. By leaving until cold dry weather in winter surplus moisture is got rid of, and the beans thresh more easily and perfectly than in the fall. Proabably the cheapest way to thresh beans is by the trampling of horses after the beans are spread on a barn floor. The horses' shoes should be removed to avoid cracking the beans by the iron points which bear the weight of so large an animal.

The Hens.

The poultry diet will bear strengthening now, since most fowls are in molt. Additional seasoning of pepper, mustard, ginger and the like will be found beneficial at this season of the year. Before grass comes again feed during the winter chopped turnip, onions and potatoes (raw) in moderate quantities. Squash and beet tops may be boiled with bran and shorts. Fowls fed in this way suffer none of the disagreeable results which follow too rapid transition from dry to green food.

A Chautauqua county dairymen gives as the secret of his success: 1. Good cows. 2. Clean pastures, free from noxious weeds and offensive odors. 3. Gentle treatment. 4. Regularity in milking. 5. Absolute cleanliness and purity of utensils, buildings, packages and everything connected with the dairy. 6. Uniform system in the churning and other processes of butter making. 7. Good common sense and honesty. 8. Enterprise sufficient to brand all packages with the name of the dairy and to seek regular customers willing to pay for an extra good product.

Buy several cheeses and keep them through the winter, remarks an exchange. As they ripen, get older, they will taste better and digest easier. Every American family should make cheese an article of diet, taking the place of meat as a partial substitute for it.

THE PROPER THING.

Plain Jerseys remain in favor.

Mull embroidered ties are again popular.

Worth is staunch in his declaration of no crinoline.

A new wrap is a cape with sleeves, made of plush, velvet or sealskin.

The rage for sashes and sash effects at the back of the dress increases.

Walking skirts are as long as possible without touching the ground.

Very dressy costumes are made wholly of wool net over colored satin.

White boucle plush bonnets will be worn for dress hats this winter.

Black underskirts, to be worn next the dress, will be generally used this winter.

Bretelles or V-shaped trimmings are most in favor on dress waists and mantles.

Lacing of braid or cord is much used on cloth and wool dresses, both on the basque and skirt.

There is a fancy for the old-fashioned quilted skirt, made of black alapaca or farmer's satin.

Gay Roman striped sashes are very effective when worn over a costume of black satin or velvet.

New waterproofs come in velvet finished surfaces and various colors, and in imitation of mixtures and fine checks.

In dressy costumes there is a greater fullness in the skirts with full draperies and the effect is given of one skirt opening over another.

In the new millinery accessions are rich and beautiful scarfs and ribbons of raised velvet, and embroidered plush and satin, of which a little goes a great way.

REGULARS.

One of the strongest proofs of the value of Kidney-Wort as a remedy for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and bowels, is the fact that it is used and prescribed by "regular" physicians. Philip C. Ballou, M. D., of Monkton, Vt., says: "Take it all in all, it is the most successful remedy I have ever used."

An [illegible] to His Birthplace in the State of Maine.

Last week I visited my birthplace in the State of Maine. I waited thirty years for the public to visit it, and as there didn't seem to be much of a rush this spring, I thought I would go and visit it myself. I was telling a friend the other day that the public did not seem to manifest the interest that I thought it ought to, and he said I ought not to mind that. "Just wait," said he, "till the people of the United States have an opportunity to visit your tomb, and you will be surprised to see how they'll run excursion trains up there to Moosehead lake, or wherever you plant yourself. It will be a perfect picnic. Your hold on the American people, William, is wonderful, but your death would seem to assure it, and kind of crystalise the affection now existing, but still in a nebulous and gummy state.

A man ought not to criticise his birthplace, I presume, and yet, if I were to do it all over again, I do not know whether I would select that particular spot or not. And yet, what memories cluster about that old house. There was the place where I first met my parent. It was at that time that an acquintance sprang up which has ripened in late years into mutual respect and esteem. It was there that what might be termed a casual meeting took place that has, under the alchemy resistless years, turned to golden links, forming a pleasant but powerful bond of union between my parents and myself. For that reason I hope that I may be spared to my parents for many years to come.

Many old memories now cluster about that old home, as I have said. There is, also, another old bric-a-bra which has accumulated since I was born there. I took a small stone from the front yard as a kind of "memento" of the occasion and the place. I do not think it has been detected yet. There was another stone in the yard, so it may be weeks before anyone finds out that I took one of them.

How humble the home, and yet what a lesson it should teach the boys of America! Here, amid the barren and the inhospitable waste of rocks and cold, the last place in the world that a man would naturally select to be born in, began the life of one who, by his own unaided effort, in after years rose to the proud height of postmaster at Laramie City, Wyoming, and, with an estimate of the future that was almost prophetic, resigned before he could be characterized as an offensive partisan.

Here on the banks of the raging Piscataquis, where winter lingers in the lap of spring till it occasions a good deal of talk, then began a career which has been the wonder and admiration of every vigilance committee west of the turbulent Missouri.

There on that spot, with no inheritance but a predisposition to premature baldness and a bitter hatred of rum, with no personal property but a misfit suspender and a stone-bruise, began a life history which has never ceased to be a warning to people who sell groceries on credit.

It should teach the youth of this young land what glorious possibilities may lie concealed in the rough and tough bosom of a reluctant present. It shows how steady perseverance and a good appetite will always win in the end. It teaches us that wealth is not indispensable, and that if we live as we should, draw out of politics at the proper time, and die a few days before the public absolutely demand it, the matter of our birthplace will not be considered.

Still my birthplace is all right as a birthplace. It was a good, quiet place to be born. All the old neighbors said that Shirley was a very quiet place up to the time I was born there, and when I took my parents by the hands and gently led them away in the spring of '43, saying: "Parents, this is no place for us," it became quiet.

It is the only birthplace I have, however, and I hope that all the readers of the Globe will feel perfectly free to go there anytime and visit it, and carry their dinner as I did. Extravagant cordiality and overflowing hospitality have always kept my birthplace back. —[Boston Sunday Globe.

"No man," says Professor Sumner, should marry unless he can afford to support an educate his possible children. People talk about the rights of the parent and the duty of the child, but I tell you that a man who is the cause of his child's existence owes the child everything instead of being owed everything by the child. Birth is a dire misfortune for many children, and their parents cannot do enough for them in return for their inherited diseases and misfortunes which they bestow upon them. One of these duties is education, and no man should marry who cannot carry this out."

Hay Fever Cured by Cream Balm.

The folly of marrying a title has again been illustrated. "You will be sorry to learn," says the Paris correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, "that the Prince Colonna, who married Miss Mackay a year or less ago, has not only spent all he got, but gone already into debt. Now, as Miss Mackay is not Mr. Mackay's daughter, but Mrs. Mackay's by her first husband, it will be interesting to know how long Mr. Mackay's benevolence will last. The poor little princes is neither pretty nor interesting, and it is not difficult to find a reason for the match, but one would think that Colonna might have had sufficient decency to make the fortune last two years, and not come down on the parents until there was at least a baby to soften their hearts."

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

Impoverished?

It is bad enough to be poor in pocket, but to be poor in blood is worse. If the liver is in good order, it changes the elements of albumen which is needed to enrich the blood. Let this albumen pass off through the kidneys, and you have that woful state of affairs known as "Bright's Disease." Keep liver, kidneys and blood in good order by the use of

Dr. Herrick's Vegetable Liver Pills,

Then, with enriched blood and sound digestion you will enjoy rosy cheeks, a firm step, a clear brain, and an inclination to work. Sold by all druggists.

Behold, Winter Cometh.

The days are colder growing,
The raw nor' easter's blowing
[illegible] of the Indian summer's fled, fled, fled,
The tramps are disappearing,
The time for snow is nearing,
The little boy is fixing up his sled, sled, sled!

Hurrah For Thanksgiving.

The glad Thanksgiving's near us,
That yearly comes to cheer us,
When rich mince-pies are served up smoking hot, hot, hot,
The jolly farmer's killing
His turkeys now and filling
The crop of each with several pounds of shot, shot, shot.

The Lazy Husband.

Some morning we'll discover
Snow three feet deep or over—
The husband then will have a dreadful cough, cough, cough,
And really won't be able
To go down to the table
Until his little wife has "shoveled off, off, off."

The Liveryman Will Have to Stand It.

The lover then, no doubt,
Will take his sweetheart out
And drive her round the suburbs in a sleigh, sleigh, sleigh,
Behind a prancing span,
Let by the livery man
Who'll likely have to whistle for his pay, pay, pay.

RIB SHAKERS.

Queen Victoria's private fortune is estimated at thirty million dollars. Jay Gould ought to send the old lady some stock circulars.—[Puck.

The New York World says Mary Anderson "moves in great curves and speaks in open diapasons." If Mary is a steamwhistle mowing machine in disguise the country ought to know it.—[Indianapolis Herald.

Robert Bonner says a man can not be ill-natured who drives much. We don't believe Robert draws his conclusion from any lengthened experience in driving hogs or carpet tacks.—[Broom Republican.

"Have you heard about Blicker?" "No, what's up now?" "They say he struck natural gas." "Natural gas! Well, I should think so! He's married a widow who talked three men to death before she was forty."—[Chicago Ledger.

Pearl Desmond writes a touching poem entitled "A Broken Link." Well, the next time Pearl goes to market she will carry her sausages home in a basket, and not try to carry them by the handle or lead them with a string.—[Burdette.

Ferd. Ward is to make stoves in the Auburn penitentiary. They can make a stove there in one piece which is too heavy for one man to lift, and that no doubt explains Ward's assignment to this particular work.—[Pittsburgh Chronicle.

"A million dollars bring more misery than happiness to a man," says a writer. Perhaps it does, but if the writer has a million to spare we are willing to run the risk of being made miserable for the rest of our mundane existence.—[Norristown Herald.

Naturalists say that the feet of the common working honey bee "exhibit the combination of a basket, a brush and a pair of pincers." Persons who have had a honey bee walk on them, in an exposed place, will marvel that a red-hot base burner stove is not also found in the "combination."—[Norristown Herald.

The composer of "Put me in my little bed" announces that he got ten dollars for writing that interesting lyric, and hints that it was not enough. It was not; he ought to have got ten years.

Jinks: "Your wife is making a crazy quilt, isn't she?" Minks (laughingly): "Why, yes; but it is a great secret. How did you know?" Jinks: "That patch on your coat looks as if it was sewed on by yourself." Minks (sadly): "It was."

He Was Sweet on Her Mother Fifteen Years Previous.

In the Mary Anderson company is plump, smooth, jolly Miss Tilbury. She does'nt amount to much as an actress yet, being a novice, but her youth and comliness are very compelling to the adulators of stage femininity. Boquets are sent to her by the noodles, and one evening a somewhat years-worn beau, famous for a quarter of a century as a gallant of the greenroom, was struck hard by her agreeable personality. His social and business relations with the management were such that he was able, just after rehearsal next day, to be introduced to the girl. She received him respectfully but not ardently, and he felt that he was not making a deep impression. He therefore made some intensely silly remarks, intended to convey his admiration.

"I seem to have been acquainted with you for a long time, somehow," he said.

"That's natural, sir," Miss Tilbury responded. "I am wonderfully like what my mother was fifteen years ago. You were very sweet on her, judging by the letters you wrote and the inscriptions on the back of your photograph that you gave her. I was overhauling a boxful of her trash just before I sailed from England, and we had a good laugh over those things."

"And who was your mother?"

"Lydia Thompson."

The wooer of two generations retired as soon as he conveniently could.

IN THE OLD HOME.

Yes, I was really engaged to be married, and a marriage was quite an event in our family, since Ellen and Sophy and Prudence were all settled into old maids, and mamma was a widow of 20 years standing. Nell had been engaged once; but her lover, poor soul, was wrecked in the Arctic, and Sophy was plain and had never received a proposal at all, and Prudence had always been too busy in caring for the household and nursing mamma to think of such a thing. So that we had lived like a sisterhood of nuns in the old Hall since I could remember.

It was a mouldy, musty sort of an old place, although in bygone years it must have been stupendously grand. There was a conservatory where no flowers ever grew; a dining hall with arched and paneled ceilings, which, instead of being sacred to the rites of hospitality, was crowded with old packing boxes and broken furniture; a great musty-smelling picture gallery, where a solitary portrait of a high-shouldered Venville ancester hung by a broken red cord, sad relic of all the departed art-treasures.

There were deserted lawns, where big-eyed cows and flocks of sheep grazed up to the very door; there were dilapidated fountains, whose water-ducts were choked up with dry leaves and dust; paths grown over with weeds, box-monsters distorted out of all shape, roses grown to tangled wildernesses. And we, the Widow Venville and her four daughters, lived in one wing, keeping as comfortable as we could, and trying to be ladies on an income which would have pinched a charwoman.

Until Helen Devereux, who had married a young lawyer, invited me to come and visit her—me, Tilly Venville, a cheery-cheeked girl of 18, with round blue eyes and a deal of inexperience—and I became acquainted with Mr. Lillume.

He was a lawyer, too. He used to come home with Mr. Devereux to tea sometimes, and he took us to drive in the park, and I liked him, and before I knew it the liking changed to love.

"My little beauty," he said to me one day, "you deserve a prince. Do you think you could be happy with a poor young lawyer!"

"I am used to poverty," I said, brightly. "We have been poor all our lives—mamma, and the girls, and me. And," suddenly hiding my face in the window curtains, "I think I could be happy anywhere with you; but——"

"Well, little Tilly," he said caressingly, "what is the but?"

"Mamma, and Prue, and Sophie and Nell—I could not leave them."

"And you need not, Tilly," he said, "they shall all come and live with us. My home may not be a splendid place, but it will shelter all who are dear to you."

So I came home with the good news, and we were all happy together, until Prudence remembered:

"The heir-at-law!" she exclaimed suddenly, with a lengthening face, "We havn't told Tilly about the heir-at-law."

"What of him?" I said. He is off in Switzerland. He needn't trouble us."

"But he has come back," said mamma "He is going to be married. And he intends to live at the Hall himself, and there are a lot of upholsterers and decorators and carpenters coming up from the city, and Miss Octavia Fuller, the squires daughter, drove up yesterday to look at the place—and do you know, Tilly, we shrewdly suspect that she is to be the lady of Heart Hall"

"Well, she's welcome to it," said I. "Let Mr. Heart have the old place. John and I are going to make a home for you and the girls. It may not be an old palace of a place like this, but I am quite sure that it will be a happy home, mamma dear.

But, still, after I had laid my head on the pillow at night, the tears kept coming into my eyes at the idea of the old home passing into the hands of strangers. For although the blood of the Hearts might run in his veins, this distant relative of my mother had spent all his life in foreign countries, no sweet associations connected with the old Hall.

He could not know, as we did, where the trout darted swiftest in the pool, or where the earliest violets opened their blue eyes. He could not gather the blood-red jacqueminot roses out of the tangled briars, nor tell on which of the ruined espaliers tho jucy pears ripened the sweetest. He did not know in which of the angles of the picture gallery the echo lingered like a disembodied ghost, nor from what window the finest view spread itself out, a living panorama. He might own the place, but he had not grown up in it, as we had.

Miss Octavia came the next day in her barouche and rustling silk skirts. She was tall and handsome and masculine-looking, with the least soupcon of a black moustache on her upper lip and a perfume of "West End," which surrounded her like an atmosphere. She nodded to me in a patronizing manner as she came in.

"So you are back again, Matilda," said she. "And engaged, they tell me, to a very worthy young man. I'm sure you will be happy. Yes," to mamma, "we must have a boudoir thrown out here to the south. The bride must have her complete suit of apartments; it's all the style now. The conservatory will be extended, and stocked by La Silliere. The frescoes are in charge Monsieur Dupresse. The furniture will be supplied by Varnish & Sattingley, and Mr. Heart has purchased some valuable paintings in France and Italy, which will set off the old gallery to good advantage. We are expecting the renovations to be quite complete by September. And of course," with that ineffably patronizing air again, "Mr. Heart will be charmed to have you visit the Hall and see the improvements, any time you choose."

Prudence and Nell were silent. Sophy [illegible] looked up from her sewing. My face crimsoned, but I did not speak, and mamma broke the awkward silence by saying:

"It is very kind of Mr. Heart, but we shall be with my daughter Tilly by that time."

"Oh!" said Miss Octavia, laughing. "So the young lawyer marries the whole family, does he? Well, really, I suppose it is the best arrangement that can be made."

And when she had swept away, leaving the "West End" perfume behind her, we looked at each other.

"I shall not think much of my cousin, Mr. Heart," said I, "if he is to marry a heartless coquette like that."

"Are we not rather jumping at conclusions?" said Nellie mildly. Our cousin may not be engaged to Miss Fuller after all."

"If he isn't," said Sophy, she is taking a great deal upon herself. And, after all, what does it matter to us whom he marries?"

"Nothing in the world," said I. "So let us talk of something else."

We made haste to pack up and go to town as soon as possible, and I was quietly married to John in a dingy old church, where the red and blue lights glimmered faintly through the Gothic windows, and the clergyman's voice sounded as if it came through a whispering gallery.

This was in the morning, and when we came out there were two carriages waiting at the church gates.

"John, dear," said I, "what are these for?"

"To take us to the railway station," said he. "Yes, don't look so amazed, little Tilly. We are all going on our wedding trip together, the mother, the sisters, and all."

"But where, John."

"To our home, Tilly.

"We are to live in Bethian terrace, John," said I, with eyes wide open with wonder.

"Oh, that's all very well for a temporary home. But I have got a country nest to take my little wild bird to, just for the present."

So we all got into the carriages and were whirled away to the train. And, marvel of marvels, where should we alight but at Hearthill station.

"John, John!" I cried, "you have taken a cottage here on purpose to please me. Oh, mamma, wasn't it kind of him to think of such a thing!"

"Is not my whole life hereafter to be devoted to pleasing you, sweetheart?" he asked, tenderly.

A low, open barouche, with purple satin cushions, a pair of richly caparisoned black horses, and two coachmen in plain black livery, were waiting for mamma and the girls. John himself helped me into a light buggy, and we drove off—to Heart Hall.

Not the old Hall that we used to know all decay and ruin, but a new Hall, with broad graveled drives, playing fountains neatly-trimmed rose gardens and wide halls paved with colored mosaics.

"Why, John," I cried, turning pink and white by turns, "it's home."

"Your home, dearest," he said tenderly. "Our home."

"Have you—bought it John?"

"Well, it has somehow drifted into my possession," he said, laughing.

"But Mr. Heart—and his bride?"

"They are here now, Tilly."

"Here!"

I started violently and looked around.

John led me laughing to the long mirror framed in crimson plush which filled the panel opposite.

"Look at them, Tilly. Tell me what you think of them. Yes, it's quite true: you are neither asleep nor dreaming. I am John Heart. The name of Lillume is mine only by courtesy. It was my mother's maiden appellation. It is true that I am a young lawyer without much practice, but I believe that I have money enough to live on if I never enter a law court. I met you by accident, I fell in love with you by accident, and you cannot blame me for wishing it to appear that I have placed you in your rightful position by accident.

"Oh, John," I cried, "and Miss Octavia Fuller?"

"She will be the most surprised of any one," said he, laughing. "Indeed, I am not sure but that she half believes that I am going to marry her."

We were so happy that golden sunset in our new home! We have been so happy since that all the pens and ink ever manufactured could not describe the expression of Miss Octavia Fuller's face when she was first introduced to the bride.

Jones, of Binghamton, is another conspicuous example of the benefit of advertising.—[Boston Journal.

A Writer's Work.

A rapid penman can write thirty-two words a minute. To do this he must draw his pen through the space of a rod sixteen and one-half feet. In forty-eight minutes his pen travels a furlong. We make, on an average, sixteen curves or turnt of the pen in writing each word. Writing thirty words in a minute, we must make 480 turns in each minute, in an hour, 28,000; in a day of only five hours, 144,000; in a year of 300 such days, 43,200,000. The man, therefore, who made 1,000,000 strokes with his pen was not at all remarkable. Many men—newspaper writers, for instance—make 4,000,000. Here we have in the aggregate a mark 300 miles long to be traced on paper by such a writer in a year.

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.

Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in this world so adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition. 29m1

THE PROPER THING.

For young girls the short apron overskirt is in favor.

Large embroidered collars are still worn by small children.

Sleeveless jackets of velvet are worn with every sort of dress.

The Eton jacket with vest and sash is a pretty design for young girls.

Extremely narrow and very wide kilt pleats are used for girls' skirts.

The newest bonnets are combination of velvet and fur of the same shade.

Red velvet bonnets of bright shades trimmed with jet are in great favor.

Cashemere, camel's hair, serge, homespun, etc., are largely used for misses' dresses.

Rough fabrics are not suitable for waists, unless intended for very light figures.

The Newmarket cloak is worn by misses and is long enough to conceal the dress skirts.

Fur shoulder capes are to be worn but probably are not so fashionable as last winter.

Girls of sixteen wear their front hair in a short bang, and their back hair in a Catogan loop.

A white embroidered muslin neck-tie, tied in a very large bow, is worn by a young girl on the street.

Yoke waists, fastened behind, with pleats from yoke to belt are among the pretty styles for girls.

Set bows are generally usep on small cloth or felt bonnets, while strings are added to the more dressy bonnets.

The very newest long gloves of undressed kid are bordered at the top by thickly set dots of bright chenille.

Beads, ribbon-loops, and aigrettes are among the trimmings for mourning bonnets. White crape bandeaus are also in vogue.

Bonnet strings should be only five-eighths to three-quarters of a yard long, and tied in a bow under the chin or only a little on one side.

Very few dresses now have flounces, but sometimes a very full bias flounce six inches wide of velvet or silk finishes the foot of plain skirts.

The most popular midwinter wrap for ladies bids fair to be the ulster, newmarket, or overcoat of seal of seal plush cut to resemble a man's overcoat.

The cloak buttons in vogue this year are so large, that upon short diagional-breasted jackets only two are used, one at the left shoulder, and the other at the end of the seam.

There is actually something new for Christmas gifts in the shape of linen lawn bands for the sleeves, scarfs and handkerchiefs made in sets and embroidered and hemstitched in exquisitely neat style.

IT IS NO WONDER

that so many people sink into untimely graves when we consider how they neglect their health. They have a disordered Liver, deranged Bowels, Constipation, Piles or diseased Kidneys, but they let it go and think they will get over it. It grows worse, other and more serious complications follow and soon it is to late to save them. If such persons would take kidney-wort it would preserve their lives. It acts upon the most important organs purifying the blood and cleansing the system, removes and prevents these disorders and promotes health.

Ben Butler's Boyhood.

Benjamin F. Butler, when a youth, was as great a madcap as ever entered the halls of a college. In all jokes, adventures and escapades he was the acknowledged ringleader. On one occassion when a lecture was to be delivered in the chapel of the university in which he was a student, "the boys" determined to have some fun, and as it was to be entirely original, the management of the affair was turned over to young Butler. It was known that the prettiest girls in town were to be present. Accordingly on the afternoon of the evening in question, Butler instructed each of his companions to catch all the swallows possible, and to hold them in readiness for the night. This was done, and the boys assembled with one or more of the birds concealed about his person. On entering the hall the young collegians separated and took seats in different portions of the room each keeping an eye on the ruling spirit of the hour. When the lecture was about one-third finished the signal was given and the imprisoned birds were released. Every swallow made straight for a light and at the same instant the gas was extinguished and the cry raised of "Bats!" The ladies and children screamed, the boys cried "Fire!" and the greatest amount of suppositious kissing took place among the students. When the lights were relit much of the male element of the office had disappeared, and it was deemed unnecessary to ask any questions. Everybody soon knew that it was one of the pranks of wild Ben Butler.—[Washington Republican.

A "Madman's" Legacy.

"Sire!" exclaimed a man in the homely garb of a mechanic to Richelieu, Prime minister of France, as he was entering his palace; "Sire, I have made a "discovery which shall make rich and "great the nation which shall develop "it. Sire, will you give me an audience?"

Richelieu, constantly importuned, finally ordered the "madman" imprisoned. Even in jail he did not desist from declaring his "delusion," which one day attracted the attention of a British nobleman, who heard DeCause's story, and developed his discovery of steam power!

All great discoveries are at first derided.

Seven years ago a man yet under the middle age, enriched by a business which covered the continent, found himself suddenly stricken down. When his physicians said recovery was impossible, he used a new discovery, which, like all advances in science, had been opposed bitterly by the schoolmen. Nevertheless it cured him, and out of gratitude therefor he consecrated a part of his wealth to the spreading of its merits before the world. Such in brief is the history of Warner's safe cure, which has won, according to the testimony of eminent persons, the most deserved reputation ever accorded to any known compound, and which is finally winning on its merits alone the approval of the most conservative practitioners. Its fame now belts the globe.—[The Herald.

A Freak of Economy.

"My dear, you haven't cut the leaves of the magazine I brought home last week."

"Fred, I haven't time to read. See how I am getting along with my rick-rack."

"Yes, dear; you've worked steadily at it every evening this week haven't you!"

"Yes."

"There's about five yards of it, isn't there?"

"Yes."

"You can buy it at the store for about two cents a yard, can't you?"

"Yes."

"That would be ten cents, wouldn't it? I regard it as a wonderful freak of economy. The gas, the tax on your eyes, the superiority of rick-rack over a well-stored mind, the——"

B. C. Giesler tells of a remarkable cure affected by Acker's Blood Elixir: A gentleman was literally covered with sores, brought on by neglecting his system; ulcers or boils came out all over him, but a thorough course of Acker's Blood Elixir cured him. A Great Victory
A Terrible Case of Scrofula Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla

"In the winter of 1879 I was attacked with Scrofula in one of the most aggravating forms. At one time I had no less than thirteen large abscesses over and around my neck and throat, continually exuding an offensive mass of bloody matter disgusting to behold, and almost intolerable to endure. It is impossible to fully describe my sufferings, as the case was complicated with Chronic Catarrh. After three years of misery, having been treated by three physicians, I was worse than ever. Finally, on the recommendation of W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, I was induced to try Hood's Sarsaparilla. And now, after having taken twelve bottles, within the last twelve months, the scrofulous eruptions have entirely ceased, and the abscesses have all disappeared, except the unsightly scars, which are daily becoming 'smaller by degrees, and beautifully less.' I do not know what it may have done for others, but I do know that, in my case, Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved an effective specific indeed. As an evidence of my gratitude I send these facts unsolicited, and I am ready to verify the authenticity of this cure, by personal correspondence with any one who doubts it." CHARLES A. ROBERTS, East Wilson, N. Y.

This statement is confirmed by W. J. Huntley, druggist, of Lockport, N. Y., who calls the cure a great victory for Hood's Sarsaparilla. Send for book giving statements of many cures.

It is a strong, aggressive newspaper, uncompromisingly Republican, and faithfully devoted to the home interest of all America. WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT DEAD.

William H. Vanderbilt, the millionaire railroad king, dropped dead suddenly, of paralysis of the brain, yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at his residence on Fifth avenue, New York. He was born at Staten Island on May 8 1821, and would therefore have been 65 years of age next May. At the time of his death Mr. Vanderbilt was engaged in discussing railroad matters in his study with Robert Garrett, president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Mr. Garrett was sitting on a sofa and facing the millionaire, who leaned forward in his arm chair as was his habit when thoroughly interested. Suddenly Mr. Garrett observed a slight indistinctness in Mr. Vanderbilt's speech which grew into an articulate sound. As he leaned over to catch his words Mr. Vanderbilt pitched forward without warning and fell heavily to the floor on his face. Medical aid was summoned but it is believed that he expired before he reached the floor. The announcement of his death rapidly spread through the city.

The children Mr. Vanderbilt leaves are in their regular succession as to age from Cornelius, who is about 40 years old, down: Cornelius, William K. Frederick W., and George W., and four daughters, Mrs. Elliot F. Shepard, Mrs. William D. Sloane, Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombley, and Mrs. Dr. Seward Webb. Cornelius and William K. are both actively engaged in the management of the family railroad interests and will so continue. Cornelius is chairman of the board of directors of the New York Central and the Michigan Central systems, and William K. holds the same office in the Lake Shore and Nickel Plate systems. Frederick W., who is about 32 years old, is a director on all the roads.

It is not believed that Mr. Vanderbilt's death will have any effect on the stock market.

Mr. Vanderbilt's wealth is estimated at about $200,000,000.

THE annual reports of Secretaries Whitney, Endicott and Lamar have been given to the public.

ACCORDING to the Syracuse Standard, Neil Gilmour is again a candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The aspirants for the office are many.

MEXICO is greatly interested in the silver question, and it is said President Cleveland's treatment of the subject in his annual message is anxiously awaited.

THE will of the late Vice-President Hendricks was notable for its brevity. One hundred words sufficed to dispose of all his property, making his wife his heir.

GOVERNOR HILL has issued a proclamation, ordering a special election in the sixth assembly district of New York, December 29, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Hall.

A CALL has been issued for a national convention of "Anti-Saloon Republicans," to be held at Toledo, Ohio, on May 5, 1886. The call declares for immediate national prohibition.

THERE are already rumors of trouble in Spain. The young Queen Mercedes, it is said, will never be in a condition of health to reign, having inherited her father's ills, and mutterings of revolution are heard.

THE first session of the Forty-ninth Congress was called to order on Monday noon by Gen. McCook, Secretary of the Senate. After passing some resolutions and swearing in new senators the Senate adjourned until the next day out of respect for Vice-president Hendricks.

THE President has appointed John A. Sullivan to be collector of internal revenue of the second district of New York. Mr. Sullivan is a well known business man of New York city, and has been a prominent member of the produce exchange for many years.

MAYOR GRACE of New York has begun a libel suit against Joseph Pulitzer and the New York World for $50,000 damages. The alleged libel is in connection with statements published in the World connecting the name of Mayor Grace with the failure of the Marine bank and the firm of Grant and Ward.

THE President's message was sent to Congress yesterday, and is the longest document of the kind ever written by a President during the present century. The Utica Herald says: "There is hardly a phase of our national life which is not touched upon with more or less of particularity. Indeed the excessive detail of the message is the most obvious criticism upon it. As a literary production, it is unexpectedly terse, elegant and vigorous in style—so unlike the annual messages of Mr. Cleveland when governor of New York, as to compel the remark that translation in station has brought with it a degree of literary culture as unexpected as it is gratifying. The President has decided opinions on all the public topics about which the people are thinking, and he has expressed them in such a way that there can be no misunderstanding what he means.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4th, 1885.

Ere this communication reaches you Congress will have convened. The Senate and House of Representatives will be called to order simultaneously. After the formal organization, the House and probably the Senate, will open with a discussion of the rules. The contest will be between those who want to make this a working session, and those who, it is alleged, would squander it in idleness and talk.

Many of the arriving Congressmen say if any business is to be accomplished during the session, there must first be a revision of the rules. The popular plan is to take some of the power away from the Committee on Appropriations, by placing a part of their work in the hands of other committees.

It was a standing joke during the last session, that the United States Congress consisted of the Senate and Sam Randall. Underneath the joke there was much deep felt jealousy of the fifteen members who compose Mr. Randall's potent committee. Any plan to curtail their prerogtives it is thought will meet with favor from the remaining three hundred and ten Members of the House, who belong to the less important committees.

The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives has a useful if not a brilliant part to perform in national politics this session. It will occupy a peculiar position. The Senate being Republican by a small majority, the House will be without the power of positive legislation, while at the same time its responsibility will be great. It will be practically on its good behavior. It will be required to show to the country that it is not inclined to do anything radical and extreme and that it is ready to propose everything that is conservative and good.

Its first work probably will be to provide for a rational count of the Electoral votes and for an orderly succession to the Presidency in case of vacancy. After these matters are disposed of three questions of importance will have to be dealt with, the reform of the Tariff and the reform of the Civil Service. On the latter no affirmative legislation will be required beyond the passage of the necessary appropriation. But efforts will be made to prevent the appropriation, to repeal the law, and to cripple the system.

Having completed his message, the President has begun upon the District of Columbia appointments. The Marshalship being first in order, the long struggle for that office has ended by Col. Wilson, a well known citizen of Washington, securing the coveted prize. As usual, the contestants were all left in the race. Mr. Wilson was not an applicant for office. The President summoned him to the White House, consulted with him for a short time and in about two hours issued his appointment. The compensation of the office is $6,000 a year. District Democrats are delighted with the appointment of a District man. "The President has kept faith with us," they say, "and we are satisfied." Unlike his predecessors, the new appointee will be excused from social duties at the White House. He will be required to give his attention to the more weighty business of the office prescribed in the Statutes. Some one else will make introductions at the Presidents' receptions, and be master of ceremonies at his State dinners.

As usual, just before the meeting of Congress, official Departmental reports are coming out with quantities of information. The Postmaster General led off with a voluminous document. He tells that the revenues of the Postal Department are steadily falling off, while the expenditures are just as steadily increasing. Owing to large Pension payments, there was no reduction last month of the national debt. The surplus was used to pay debts to the soldiers instead of to the bond-holders.

STATE AND VICINITY.

Nelson McLogan, a farmer, was killed by a D. L. & W. train at Norwich Friday.

Three more conductors on the Central road received "walking tickets" last week.

Sixty men are at work fitting up the stations on the Syracuse, Phœnix & Oswego railroad.

The hop market is now said to be the lowest that it has been since the last harvest. Dealers refuse to pay more six cents a pound.

Two trains on the Brooklyn bridge railroad ran into each other Saturday morning, and in the smash-up, six persons were badly injured.

The sale of lands in twenty-three counties, for taxes, will commence at the capitol to-day. This will constitute the largest tax sale ever made by a comptroller.

William H. Vanderbilt has placed his son, George Vanderbilt, in possession of all his property on Staten Island. In all about 450 acres is conveyed.

Lockport, in this state, is excited over the refusal of the state authorities to allow drains from the city to empty into the Erie canal. The effect will be ruinous to the health of the city, it is said.

The West Shore conductors have been ordered to inquire of each passenger when boarding his train at which station he wishes to get off, and if by mistake the passenger gets aboard and holds a ticket for a way station, the train must be stopped to let the person off at his destination.

THE Republican senators met in caucus Friday and nominated General Logan by acclamation, for President of the senate. Senator Logan kindly but firmly declined to accept the office, preferring to be an active member on the floor. General Logan's declination was a surprise to many of his friends. An adjournment was then taken until Saturday when John Sherman of Ohio was elected president pro tempore.

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch no matter how costly be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate. How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver, or kidneys are out of order. Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits.

Fully three-fourths of the cheese was taken by Landt & Mesick, our home buyers. The weather is now too cold to ship cheese and that sold to-day will be held till the weather moderates. Sales are

Three Peculiarities

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier and regulating medicine, is characterized by three peculiarities, namely:

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT DEAD.

William H. Vanderbilt, the millionaire railroad king, dropped dead suddenly, of paralysis of the brain, yesterday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, at his residence on Fifth avenue, New York. He was born at Staten Island on May 8 1821, and would therefore have been 65 years of age next May. At the time of his death Mr. Vanderbilt was engaged in discussing railroad matters in his study with Robert Garrett, president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Mr. Garrett was sitting on a sofa and facing the millionaire, who leaned forward in his arm chair as was his habit when thoroughly interested. Suddenly Mr. Garrett observed a slight indistinctness in Mr. Vanderbilt's speech which grew into an articulate sound. As he leaned over to catch his words Mr. Vanderbilt pitched forward without warning and fell heavily to the floor on his face. Medical aid was summoned but it is believed that he expired before he reached the floor. The announcement of his death rapidly spread through the city.

The children Mr. Vanderbilt leaves are in their regular succession as to age from Cornelius, who is about 40 years old, down: Cornelius, William K, Frederick W., and George W., and four daughters, Mrs. Elliot F. Shepard, Mrs. William D. Sloane, Mrs. Hamilton McK. Twombley, and Mrs. Dr. Seward Webb. Cornelius and William K. are both actively engaged in the management of the family railroad interests and will so continue. Cornelius is chairman of the board of directors of the New York Central and the Michigan Central systems, and William K. holds the same office in the Lake Shore and Nickel Plate systems. Frederick W., who is about 32 years old, is a director on all the roads.

It is not believed that Mr. Vanderbilt's death will have any effect on the stock market.

Mr. Vanderbilt's wealth is estimated at about $200,000,000.

THE annual reports of Secretaries Whitney, Endicott and Lamar have been given to the public.

ACCORDING to the Syracuse Standard, Neil Gilmour is again a candidate for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The aspirants for the office are many.

MEXICO is greatly interested in the silver question, and it is said President Cleveland's treatment of the subject in his annual message is anxiously awaited.

THE will of the late Vice-President Hendricks was notable for its brevity. One hundred words sufficed to dispose of all his property, making his wife his heir.

GOVERNOR HILL has issued a proclamation, ordering a special election in the sixth assembly district of New York, December 29, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William Hall.

A CALL has been issued for a national convention of "Anti-Saloon Republicans," to be held at Toledo, Ohio, on May 5, 1886. The call declares for immediate national prohibition.

THERE are already rumors of trouble in Spain. The young Queen Mercedes, it is said, will never be in a condition of health to reign, having inherited her father's ills, and mutterings of revolution are heard.

THE first session of the Forty-ninth Congress was called to order on Monday noon by Gen. McCook, Secretary of the Senate. After passing some resolutions and swearing in new senators the Senate adjourned until the next day out of respect for Vice-president Hendricks.

CARL PRETZEL'S Weekly says the Rutledge Publishing Company of Easton, Pa., are "dead beats of the meanest kind." Right you are, Carl. We know it from experience and would advise brother publishers and readers to beware of them.

THE President has appointed John A. Sullivan to be collector of internal revenue of the second district of New York. Mr. Sullivan is a well known business man of New York city, and has been a prominent member of the produce exchange for many years.

MAYOR GRACE of New York has begun a libel suit against Joseph Pulitzer and the New York World for $50,000 damages. The alleged libel is in connection with statements published in the World connecting the name of Mayor Grace with the failure of the Marine bank and the firm of Grant and Ward.

THE President's message was sent to Congress yesterday, and is the longest document of the kind ever written by a President during the present century. The Utica Herald says: "There is hardly a phase of our national life which is not touched upon with more or less of particularity. Indeed the excessive detail of the message is the most obvious criticism upon it. As a literary production, it is unexpectedly terse, elegant and vigorous in style—so unlike the annual messages of Mr. Cleveland when governor of New York, as to compel the remark that translation in station has brought with it a degree of literary [illegible]

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4th, 1885.

Ere this communication reaches you Congress will have convened. The Senate and House of Representatives will be called to order simultaneously. After the formal organization, the House and probably the Senate, will open with a discussion of the rules. The contest will be between those who want to make this a working session, and those who, it is alleged, would squander it in idleness and talk.

Many of the arriving Congressmen say if any business is to be accomplished during the session, there must first be a revision of the rules. The popular plan is to take some of the power away from the Committee on Appropriations, by placing a part of their work in the hands of other committees.

It was a standing joke during the last session, that the United States Congress consisted of the Senate and Sam Randall. Underneath the joke there was much deep felt jealousy of the fifteen members who compose Mr. Randall's potent committee. Any plan to curtail their prerogrtives it is thought will meet with favor from the remaining three hundred and ten Members of the House, who belong to the less important committees.

The Democratic majority in the House of Representatives has a useful if not a brilliant part to perform in national politics this session. It will occupy a peculiar position. The Senate being Republican by a small majority, the House will be without the power of positive legislation, while at the same time its responsibility will be great. It will be practically on its good behavior. It will be required to show to the country that it is not inclined to do anything radical and extreme and that it is ready to propose everything that is conservative and good.

Its first work probably will be to provide for a rational count of the Electoral votes and for an orderly succession to the Presidency in case of vacancy. After these matters are disposed of three questions of importance will have to be dealt with, the reform of the Tariff and the reform of the Civil Service. On the latter no affirmative legislation will be required beyond the passage of the necessary appropriation. But efforts will be made to prevent the appropriation, to repeal the law, and to cripple the system.

Having completed his message, the President has begun upon the District of Columbia appointments. The Marshalship being first in order, the long struggle for that office has ended by Col. Wilson, a well known citizen of Washington, securing the coveted prize. As usual, the contestants were all left in the race. Mr. Wilson was not an applicant for office. The President summoned him to the White House, consulted with him for a short time and in about two hours issued his appointment. The compensation of the office is $6,000 a year. District Democrats are delighted with the appointment of a District man. "The President has kept faith with us," they say, "and we are satisfied." Unlike his predecessors, the new appointee will be excused from social duties at the White House. He will be required to give his attention to the more weighty business of the office prescribed in the Statutes. Some one else will make introductions at the Presidents' receptions, and be master of ceremonies at his State dinners.

As usual, just before the meeting of Congress, official Departmental reports are coming out with quantities of information. The Postmaster General led off with a voluminous document. He tells that the revenues of the Postal Department are steadily falling off, while the expenditures are just as steadily increasing. Owing to large Pension payments, there was no reduction last month of the national debt. The surplus was used to pay debts to the soldiers instead of to the bond-holders.

Nelson McLogan, a farmer, was killed by a D. L. & W. train at Norwich Friday.

Sixty men are at work fitting up the stations on the Syracuse, Phœnix & Oswego railroad.

The hop market is now said to be the lowest that it has been since the last harvest. Dealers refuse to pay more six cents a pound.

Two trains on the Brooklyn bridge railroad ran into each other Saturday morning, and in the smash-up, six persons were badly injured.

The sale of lands in twenty-three counties, for taxes, will commence at the capitol to-day. This will constitute the largest tax sale ever made by a comptroller.

William H. Vanderbilt has placed his son, George Vanderbilt, in possession of all his property on Staten Island. In all about 450 acres is conveyed.

Lockport, in this state, is excited over the refusal of the state authorities to allow drains from the city to empty into the Erie canal. The effect will be ruinous to the health of the city, it is said.

The West Shore conductors have been ordered to inquire of each passenger when boarding his train at which station he wishes to get off, and if by mistake the passenger gets aboard and holds a ticket for a way station, the train must be stopped to let the person off at his destination.

EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver, or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits.

The Little Falls Dairy Market.

LITTLE FALLS, Dec. 7

CHEESE About the same amount of cheese sold to-day as last Monday. Quality took a wide range as did also price. A good share of the sales were of every other day cheese. Several buyers were on hand, but they generally showed no particular desire to purchase unless something of fine quality was presented. Fully three fourths of the cheese was taken by Landt & Mesick, our home buyers. The weather is now too cold to ship cheese and that sold to-day will be held till the weather moderates. Sales are:

3d: The process by which the active medicinal properties are secured.

The result is a medicine of unusual strength and curative power, which effects cures heretofore unequalled. These peculiarities belong exclusively to Hood's Sarsaparilla, and are

Howe Ventilating Stove.

A NEW STOVE. ON A NEW PRINCIPLE.

A HANDSOME STOVE. AN EXCELLENT HEATER.

AN ECONOMICAL STOVE. A PERFECT VENTILATOR.

☞ A good Base Burner of any kind will heat a room, but it also destroys and burns up the life principle of the air. Foul air if hot will not keep a person warm. The Howe Ventilating Stove warms the room and keeps the air pure. It Ventilates the room at the same time that it heats it. Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

A NEW RAILROAD.

The Prospects Favorable For a Route From Fulton to Hannibal—Negotiations Opened.

For some time past the air has been full of rumors that the R. W. & O. railroad company contemplated building a new road from Fulton to Hannibal. The proposed road was said to be from the present junction alongside the N. Y., O. & W. road to Pratt street and then across the old Ross lot to First street, and after crossing the river diagonally between the bridges, on in nearly a direct line to Hannibal. If this was done a depot would be build both in Fulton and Lower Oswego Falls It is said that this new road is a necessity owing to the exorbitant rate the R. W. & O. road have to pay for the use of the Ontario track from the junction to Oswego. We were informed yester- that negotiations were pending between property holders along the proposed route and the railroad company, and that the latter had secured the refusal of the land for sixty days. A TIMES reporter yesterday saw an interested gentleman, who, while he would say nothing positive in regard to the building of the proposed road, did not deny that the rumors were true. The idea of a railroad from this point to Hannibal is not a new one. Several years ago the R. W. & O. railroad company talked of this route and surveyed the ground over, and at one time it was thought to be a settled fact that the new road would be built. The advantages of this proposed road, both to the public and the company can be seen at a glance. It would give the people of Hannibal and the surrounding country an almost direct route into Syracuse. While at this writing we are unable to say positively that the new road will be built, yet the prospects never looked so favorable as now. Another rumor is to the effect that the D., L. & W. company, in order to better compete with the new Phœnix road, were contemplating laying their track near the west end of the lower bridge and establishing a depot at that point. This would accommodate not only the residents of Oswego Falls and vicinity, but many Fulton people; and we think would prove remunerative to the company.

Too Superstitious.

The conversation turning upon superstition, the young man remarked that he was a thorough believer in ghosts, and to the incredulous remarks of his companion he declared that he could show them one.

Then their jibes became loud indeed until he pulled out his pocket-book and said: "Look at that!" It was so thin and emaciated that the light shown through it like an open window.

His companions were convinced and thought they might produce a small army of ghosts.

This is a too common superstition. The only way to exorcise this species of ghost is to buy overcoats and clothing at Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street. Why, just think of it! Enough may be saved in the purchase of a single overcoat to get the boy a suit of clothes, and the saving on this will get a new pocket-book. See? Try it then.

Before the cellars, both of the dwelling and the barn, are closed up for the winter, see to it that they are perfectly clean and free from any material that may cause noisome smells. If they are improperly drained so that water stands in them at times, their condition could not be worse, and must be improved.

To show how disastrously the manufacture of imitation butter and oleo oil from which it is manufactured in Europe affects the dairy interest, we give a statement of the exports of imitation butter, oleo oil and dairy products for the year ending June 30 1884:

Imitation butter	1,537,082 lbs	$ 171,119
Oleo oil	37,785,159 "	4,671,243
Dairy products	20,028,371 "	3,750,771

The art of butter making will never reach perfection until we stop putting salt in the butter, says the American Dairyman. It is a depraved taste that requires a salt taste in butter. The most critical judges in the old country never think of allowing salt to come near the butter, and after getting accustomed to it, there is all the difference between the two that there is between salt and fresh fish, flesh or other dried or prepared food.

The Rural New Yorker on apple gathering says: "In picking and handling, their delicate structure should never be forgotten; no matter how small the bruise may be, every one detracts from their keeping qualities. No apple intended for anything but cider making or hog feeding should ever be clubbed or shaken from the trees, or, when picked, thrown about or dropped into barrels, but in every operation every apple that is intended for market or home use should be handled as carefully as an egg."

Good Advice From a Humorist.

To young men Bob Burdette says:

You take a basin of water, place your finger in it for twenty-five or thirty seconds, take it out and look at the hole that is left. The size of that hole represents about the impression that advice makes on a young man's mind.

Don't depend too much on your family—the dead part I mean. The world wants live men; it has no use for dead ones. Queen Victoria can trace her ancestors back in a direct line to William the conquerer. If you cannot get further back than your father you are better off. Your father was a better man than old William. He had better clothes to wear, better food to eat, and was better housed.

If you are a diamond be sure that you will be found. Cheek, brass or gall never gets ahead of merit.

I love a man who is straightforward. Ask for what you want. If you want to marry a rich man's daughter or borrow $500 from him, ask him for it; it amounts to the same thing in the end. It is always better to astonish a man than to bore him.

Remember that in the morning of life come the hard working days. Hard work never killed a man. It's fun, recreation, relaxation, holidays that kill. The fun that results in a head the next morning so big that a tub could hardly cover it, is what kills. Hard work never does.

Those who come after us have to work just as hard as we do. When I shovel the snow off my sidewalk, if perchance I take a three-quarter piece off my neighbors walk, I put it back, because if I didn't I should be doing him an injustice.

You can't afford to do anything but what is good. You are on a dress parade all the time.

Don't be afraid of being called a one idea man or a crank. If you have one idea, you have more than most men have. It takes a smart man to be a crank.

A Splendid Dairy

is one that yields its owner a good profit through the whole season. But he must supply the cows with what they need in order for them to be able to keep up their product. When their butter gets light in color he must make it "gilt edged" by using Wells, Richardson & Co's., Improved Butter Color. It gives the golden color of June, and adds five cents per pound to the value of the butter.

Prof Faton of Yale college in a recent lecture to the students told them it was not certain Eve tempted Adam with an apple in the garden of Eden. He thinks probably it was a quince, "because the apple of the present day was propagated from the crab-apple, and it is not at all likely Adam would have been taken in by such a puckery little bait."

THEY WILL SURELY FIND YOU.

They are looking for you everywhere. Drafts of air in unexpected places, going from hot rooms to cool ones, carelessness in changing clothing; In short anything which ends in a "common cold in the head." Unless arrested this kind of cold becomes seated in the mucous membrane of the head. Then it is catarrh. In any and all its stages this disease always yields to Ely's Cream Balm. Safe, agreeable, certain. Price 50 cents.

The story is told by John C. Christian, a lawyer of Chicago, who transacted the major portion of Mr. Honore's legal business during the dark days of 1878. Mr. Christian came into some notoriety at the Prohibition convention at Pittsburgh last year by nominating John Peter St. John for the Presidency. The story as related is about as follows:

Prior to the panic of 1873 Mr. Honore held about $9,000,000 or $10.000,000 of Chicago property, on which he owed about $5,000,000 and no man in Chicago had better credit. He had the confidence of wealthy capitalists. During the squeeze of 1873, and near the first of the year, he was in St. Louis, and was in conversation with the President of the bank where he did business.

"Mr. Honore," said the banker, "your account is overdrawn here some $2,500, and, as it is near the first of the year, we would be exceedingly obliged if you would balance the same to-day."

"It is impossible and out of the question for me to do it to day, and the probabilities are that it will be many more days before I can," returned Mr Honore.

"Well," said the banker, "can't you give a note, draw a draft, do something, just so the book-keeper can balance the books?"

"Draw a draft! Who the d—l would I draw a draft on? I might as well telegraph the Czar of Russia for funds as to draw a draft."

"Well, Mr. Honore, draw a draft on the Czar. That will square the books, and that's the main thing just now."

So, after some conversation, a sight draft for the amount was regularly drawn and started on its mission, and the proper credit given Mr. Honore. The draft passed through many banking firms in this and the old country, and by the time it reached the Czar had many blue ribbons and seals belonging to the different institutions through which it passed.

It was presented to the Czar through one of his agents, who desired instructions what to do with it. The Czar looked it over, but could not understand how he came to owe money to Mr. Honore, but as everything appeared regular he instructed that it be paid, but told his Secretary to inform Mr. Honore that the next time he drew a draft to send an itemized bill.

Jay Gould not an Ogre.

Now that Jay Gould is to retire from business, people find it in their hearts to say kind things of him. A writer in the Philadelphia Press draws quite a different picture of the financier from that commonly conceived: Of all busy men in New York, Jay Gould, who, by the way, is about to retire from the street, seems the least so to his visitor. Mr. Gould entertains his business friends with the manner of a quiet and refined gentleman, hears all they want to say and never for a moment by word or act indicates that he is busy. I was with him one day as he was going from his office in the Western Union building to an ante-room where some twenty gentlemen, including General Eckert, General Dodge, William Henry Hulburt, then o. the World, and Cyrus W. Field, were waiting to see him. As he approached the door a fine looking, but abashed boy timidly approached him. "What can I do for you, my boy?" said the millionaire, stopping and looking leisurely into his face. It was the duty of the youth to dun the great Jay Gould and the task had quite overwhelmed him. He diffidently stammered out that he had a bill from an up-town house that he would like paid. Mr. Gould placed his two hands on the boy's shoulder, faced him, and in the kindest way told him that he understood the whole case, but that, as there had been some mistake about the delivery of the goods, he would have to see Mrs. Gould. He than took the boy aside and wrote him a note which would secure access to that lady, and patting him on the back, told him to go up town at once. [illegible] could not have delivered a [illegible] from an unpleasant predicament with more tenderness than did the busy millionaire on this occasion.

Beauty that will stand the test of marble and still be lovely is, of course, the highest type, and does not depend on color for loveliness. The Venus of the ancients finds her latter-day rival in Pauline Bonaparte, of whose figure and face it was proven that every line was one of beauty and each in perfect harmony. Students of beauty have many times failed to find in the picture of Madame Ricamier all the beauty of outline that is attributed to her, but in bust taken when she was about eighteen there is not only beauty of outline, but a most piquant and attractive form of it. There had not come to her then the positive idea of her own attraction and it appears as if she had tried to look serious; and yet even in clay the sculptor could not help giving the suggestion of an impending laugh, the restrained desire showing the dimpling of the chin. A critic says "An idea of youth and health is conveyed in the firm modelling of the cheeks and bust."

Suggestive Reflections.

BY A. G. TILDEN.

Obey [illegible] commandments as well as you can Consistent with duty to God and to man.

That curse who smites your right cheek without cause,
Will excuse you the left to nature's first laws.

Who filches your cloak, good name or treasure,
Make justice his coat with good legal measure

Accord to all men the right of conscience to claim,
Concede to no man your sacred right to the same.

Lift your fallen brother man, and cheer him on his way,
You may get home before he can, where all must go to stay.

In choosing your friends from the opposite sex
Remember that water and oil never mix.

Very positive men loud, presumptive in speech,
Are like the blank cartridge the sequel will teach.

The noble soul with self control, speaks boldly frank and fair,
While whispering men, nine out of ten will prove to be a snare.

In serving one master how inspiring our hope,
No fear of the tempter, no need of the pope.

Franklin said he who went borrowing, sorrowing went,
But Shylock says I am still sorrowing, I have lent.

In loving your neighbor if should be evil,
What hinders a christian from having a devil.

By what rule of ethics can man love his foe
If in loving he cherish the cause of his woe.

The noblest motives of the pure and wise,
Are oft impugned by knaves through evil eyes
The standard measure of this class of men,
Reflect but their own image back again.

Between two extremes I take my position.
By the great law of nature I make this condition:
From Moses to Christ the antipode features,
The lines are as varied as God's human creatures.

JEFFERSONIAN SIMPLICITY.

A Tradition Not Observed in Washington.

["Carp" in Cleveland Leader.]

When Cleveland was elected there was a great talk about the era of Jeffersonian simplicity which was to dawn upon Washington. Cleveland has come, and we look in vain for the simplicity. His inauguration cost at least the tenth of a million, and the cost of his inaugural ball footed up at least $45,000. This splendor of the beginning increases as time goes on. Each of the Cabinet Ministers lives in a house worth a good round fortune. Secretary Whitney, not with Secretary Frelinguysen's mansion, must needs add a ballroom, larger than anything ever known at the Capitol. Secretary Manning, when he goes to sleep, reposes on a plush-covered mattrass, and kicks up the feet which used to carry newspapers against sheets of Irish linen. A silk quilt covers his adipose frame, and in his journeys from the Treasury to the White House, in the same block, he must always have a two-horse carriage. Even Cleveland has his coachman in livery, though he expects the police to act as his footman. Secretary Bayard walks the street with his English air and toadies the foreigners. His favorite dish is terrapin, and he poses here as an epicurian and a gastronome. Secretary Vilas has the stiffest backed coachman in Washington. He seldom walks at all, and when he does he apes the airs of Roscoe Conkling. The dreamy Lamar found the elegant interior department too plebian for him and he has constructed a bath room which would do credit to the Sultan's seraglio. Secretary Endicott, with all the blue blood in his veins from his witch burning ancestor, the first Governor of Massachusetts, lives right royally in the house of gentleman George Pendleton and one of his rooms is papered in quilted satin. Attorney-General Garland is the only Democrat in the Cabinet, if there be any. His comparative poverty may, however, be the secret of his Democracy, and should his Pan Electric Telephone stock company go up to par, he may develop other extravagant tastes than that of eating French candy.

"Why, mamma? What?" inquired the daughter, demurely.

"Why, you jowered and quarreled for half an hour like a pair of pickpockets."

"Oh," she replied, remembering the circumstances, "Harry wanted me to take the big chair and I wanted him to take it because he was company, you know."

"Well, what did you quarrel about?"

"We didn't quarrel, mamma; only he insisted that I should take it and I wouldn't."

"How did you settle it finally?"

A Woman's Question.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart, and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?

Do you know you have asked for the priceless thing
As a child might ask for a toy,
Demanding what others have died to win,
With the reckless dash of a boy?

You have written my lessons of duty out,
Man-like you have questioned me;
Now stand at the bar of my woman's soul
Until I shall question thee.

You require your mutton shall always be hot,
Your socks and your shirts be whole;
I require your heart shall be pure as God's stars,
And pure as Heaven your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef;
I require a better thing;
A seamstress you're wanting for stockings and shirts—
I look for a man and a king.

A king for a beautiful realm called home,
And a man that the master, God,
Shall look upon as he did the first,
And say "It is very good."

I am fair and young, but the rose will fade
From my soft young cheek one day;
Will you love me then 'mid the fallen leaves
As you did mid the bloom of May?

Is your heart an ocean so strong and deep
I may launch my all on its tide?
A loving woman finds Heaven or hell
On the day she is made a bride.

I require all things that are grand and true,
All things that a man should be;
If you give this all I would stake my life
To be all you demand of me.

If you cannot do this, a laundress and cook
You can hire with little to pay;
But a woman's heart, and a woman's life
Are not to be won that way.

MISS GLYNN'S ADVENTURE.

Many years ago there stood at the crossroads between Brixton and Crampton county an old farm house, built in a style that few of us remember, with large, cheerful rooms and windows that opened on to a carefully trimmed lawn. Roses and honeysuckles grew there in rich profusion, and in the fall, bright yellow chrysanthemums decked the garden beds.

A long shady avenue of trees so obscured the house that in midsummer, it seemed like 'a lodge in some vast wilderness' and so lonely that in spite of its beauties a timed person would have hesitated to buy it.

But Miss Glynn was not a timid person. She had lived twenty-five years in this vale of tears without encountering either ghosts or burglars, and she pursued the even tenor of her way through seed-time and harvest, without any apparent desire for companionship or relief from the monotony of her existence.

People said that she had had a romance early in her youth, which had ended in cruel disappointment, and that when her father died and left her sole possessor of the old homestead, she had decided to keep on living there, hiding from a curious world the one sorrow of her life.

However that may be, Miss Glynn kept her own secrets. The door of the closet which contained her skeleton was never open, and when anyone from the neighboring village did come to call on her, they found her cheerily at work, the house as neat as wax and every sign of a well-regulated household.

One night (I have this story from Miss Glynn's own lips) there was a wedding at Brixton, a hamlet some five miles distant, and her cook and housemaid, being related to the bride, desired to attend it.

There was no way for them to get there unless John Thorn, the farmer, drove them over and stayed to bring them back.

Now Miss Glynn, as I said before, was moreover, very indulgent to her farm hands, so she said, "You may go, I am not at all afraid to be left alone; only be sure and return in time for the morning's work."

In a wing of the old house slept Jim Sanford, the chore boy, a half-witted fellow, about fifteen years old, who would have been no use as a protector, but Miss Glynn laughingly unchained Don, the great watchdog, more to satisfy the servants than from any nervous fears of her own. And when the usual time came for retiring, she went up to her lonely room with as little dread of the shadows of night falling on the old house, as if a regiment of mounted dragoons kept guard outside her window.

She said that she must have fallen into a light doze, when something (she never knew what) awakened her. No moon shone in through the old-fashioned gabeled windows, and everything was plunged in that profound stillness which can be felt.

A peculiar consciousness of another presence in the room came over Miss Glynn. It oppressed her; she tried to shake it off, to think of something else—to go to sleep. The distant bark of a watchdog fell on her ear. She endeavored to weary herself by counting the barks—in vain; above and beyond all other ideas was the persistent and haunting one that in her chamber somewhere another human being was concealed.

Miss Glynn was an energetic woman; her resolves were but the preludes to immediate action. All of a sudden the darkness became intolerable to her, and without any actual fear, but more from a longing desire for a ray of light, she stretched out her hand to reach a match from the little table beside her bed, only to feel it gently but firmly grasped.

Not a cry escaped her, all her wonderful power of self-control came to her aid, and without struggling, she merely asked:

"Who is there?"

A man's voice answered from beside the bed:

"Madame, I am sorry to disturb your [illegible], but I should be much obliged [illegible] where [illegible] valuables [illegible]"

She saw him then, a tall, handsome man, evidently a desperado; to be foiled, not struggled with.

Miss Glynn's wits were as ready as her presence of mind.

"Sir," said she, in the same polite tone he had adopted, "it is embarrassing for me rise and dress in the presence of a gentleman. I will accomodate you, but I must request that you step outside the door while I make my toilet."

With a bow her visitor left her, having glanced cautiously around the chamber to assure himself that she had no other means of exit, and took his post just outside in the old-fashioned hall, whistling softly to himself, or humming an air from one of the operas.

And she?—

During the five minutes in which she made her hasty toilet, Miss Glynn had not only hidden in her bosom a bunch of bank notes, but had laid her plans for checkmating the gentlemanly burglar.

"I am ready," said she, throwing open the door, and looking as trim and neat as if she had prepared herself for congenial company.

He glanced admiringly [illegible] there, the flicker from [illegible] casting a glimmer of light [illegible] over her white dressing gown. [illegible] and smiling she met him, not a [illegible] in her voice, not a bit less color in her healthy cheeks.

Having produced a bag [illegible] quested, with many apologies [illegible] shown the silver, with which [illegible] his bag. Nothing escaped [illegible] old knife and fork given to her [illegible] baby by her grandfather, and [illegible] valued as a relic.

One thing after another [illegible] into the capacious sack, all [illegible] brac, little ornaments, bits [illegible] last of all, her mother's w[illegible] he had only left that," [illegible] to herself, but (shaking [illegible] his back) "I will be even [illegible]."

All this time the man [illegible] running fire of small talk [illegible] mentary, interspersing it [illegible] with apologies for disturbing her [illegible].

Having at last crammed [illegible] into his sack nearly everything but a four post bedstead and the [illegible] he smiled and suggested refreshments.

Now was Miss Glynn's [illegible]. She acceded to his request, offering him all the dainties the larder afforded, adding that he was welcome to what wine he could drink.

"We will finish with that, madam," said he, sitting on a flour barrel and dangling one leg, while he deliberately and daintily picked a chicken bone, helping himself now and then to some pickled olives, which he pronounced excellent.

"Madame," said he, [illegible] glance at her, "you are a very charming person. I am proud to have met you; it is seldom in the paths of my profession I have met your equal in pluck, elegance of manner, beauty of expression and delightful conversation. What do you say to a union between us? I am poor but honest, with a fine appreciation of jokes—and you are too fair a flower to waste your sweetness on the desert air—yum, yum;" he mumbled, "these olives are like yourself—admirable."

"I feel much honored," said Miss Glynn. "Your proposal is flattery, but I should like some references."

"References! Madame, I have thousands of them. I have killed two men, served six years in Sing Sing for stealing a watch, and ——"

"You are undoubtedly a remarkable person," said Miss Glynn, with an unpleasant conviction that he would add the murder of one woman to the two men in his next adventure if her wits failed her.

"We will talk of our [illegible] when your appetite is satisfied. We [illegible] chat at our ease."

"And you can sooth my savage breast with melody on that piano," he added with a bow. "And now for the wine, the sparkling wine! I was [illegible] in the days of my youth," he [illegible]. "Would you have thought it?"

"I would not," answered Miss Glynn, opening the door to the [illegible]. Will you walk down with me [illegible] yourself?" turning round with [illegible] made all the brighter by the [illegible] of the tallow candle she carried.

"Ah—h——," cried he, [illegible] lips, for down a flight of stone steps [illegible] beheld bin after bin of bottles, and in imagination he already tasted their fragrant contents. No fear of the weak woman by his side entered his brain; no memory of Jael occured to him. Down the stone stairs he tripped and went from one bottle to another, examining their lables as a bee sucks honey from a flower, she holding the light.

"These," said Miss Glynn, leading the way to the far end of the cellar, where there was one bin larger and deeper than the rest, in which were only two bottles, "these you will find in excellent condition. My father had them direct from Spain in the year —80, and they must be in magnificent order."

"What is the label?" he inquired, bending over, with the eye of a connoisseur, to examine it.

Like lightning she tripped up his heels and in he fell, head-first, right into the bin, and blowing out the candle, she ran for her life to the cellar steps, up which she went quicker than she have ascended them before.

Breathless and panting she reached the top and shut the door, which closed only with a key. Her sense told her that she was now doubly in danger; he had been in good temper, but if he got out she would have to contend with a desperate ruffian. This frail door would be nothing to such a man; he could break it down like a reed.

With her frail strength the dauntless woman dragged the heavy dining table against it, and on that she piled chairs, heavy drawers, anything—every[illegible]

She said that in her life she never worked so hard or possessed such strength as when constructing that barricade between herself and utter destruction.

At this crisis she thought of Don, the great watch dog, and wondered at his silence.

Running to the back door, which she found wide open, she saw him dead at his post.

No time could she waste in sentimental regret, but as she returned to guard her fortress, the tears rushed to her eyes as she remembered the many lonely evenings she and Don had watched the dancing firelight in the old sitting room together, and how he had never failed to show her the most untiring and selfish devotion.

A weaker woman would have run away, but Miss Glynn was made of no such metal. The servants would be home at 4 o'clock; it was then 2 and during these intervening hours she proposed to remain and protect her property.

Seizing an old gun of her father's, which had always stood in the hall, she took her post at the cellar door, waiting [illegible] might come. It was not loaded, but an empty gun has done wonders [illegible] and may again, she said to herself.

It was not long before the man found the steps and his way up them, and then [illegible] such a [illegible] at that door, [illegible] curses, as [illegible] which, she [illegible] for many a [illegible] day afterward.

[illegible] for that [illegible] alone, [illegible] an unloaded [illegible] against the ruffian.

[illegible] Providence [illegible] dining table [illegible] her.

[illegible] was a strong man, but he had taken a deep draught of wine before he [illegible] and [illegible] more unsteady than [illegible] when the servants came tired and sleepy from their [illegible] found her there, white [illegible] but [illegible].

John Thorn took a horse, mounted it, and rode furiously to a neighboring farm house, and in twenty minutes three strong men opened that cellar door, and pinioned the hero of the night.

And Miss Glynn?

Oh, she got over the effects of her adventure, though she never afterward allowed her servants to leave her alone at night, and she told me that she always kept a loaded revolver by her bedside. And I know that story is true, for Miss Glynn was my aunt.

And the burglar?

Oh, he added another six years dissipation at Sing Sing to his former list of "References."

THE PROPER THING.

Undraped pleated or gathered skirts grow in favor.

Low corsages are in great favor for evening dresses.

Plush hats are especially fashionable for young girls and children.

Braid used on cloth dresses must be the exact shade of the material.

Bronze, violet, brown and plum are desirable colors in all the rich shades.

Smooth-surfaced materials should be finished with braid and stitching.

Tucked and shirred bonnets are as popular as they were thirty years ago.

Pink, pale green and yellow dresses are largely used for evening toilettes.

Feathers are more popular than flowers for the garniture of evening dresses.

According to one authority, brown is the popular and only color to be worn this season.

Utility is the distinguishing feature this year of a lady's costume, from her bonnet to her shoes.

[illegible]

[illegible] worn [illegible].

A black bonnet mingled with pink velvet with full tips of the same delicate tint, forms a very pretty evening bonnet.

The homespun suits of this season, both for men and women, are made of real, rough, woolen cottage-woven homespun, crude and unfinished in appearance.

Veils are coming to the fore again. Not the style that wore off the eyelashes and jeopardize the sight, but the longer and more graceful ones which hang from the edge of the bonnet to the chin, and the better the lace the more in style you will be.

VERY REMARKABLE RECOVERY.

Mr. Geo. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved, that she is able now to do her own work."

Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at R. E. Phillips.

Fire,—Murder,—Rats.

A woman ran out of a house on Beaubien street the other day crying crying "fire" as loud as he could yell. A pedestrian who was passing by sprang up the steps and into the hall and being unable to see or smell smoke he turned to the gasping and excited woman and asked:

"Where is the fire? I can't see any signs of one."

"I—I didn't mean fire? I—I mean murder!" she replied.

"Is there a man in the house?"

"No sir."

"Who tried to murder you.

"Oh, I didn't mean murder, I guess; but the awfulest biggest rat you ever set eyes on chased our cat across the ketchen and then stood and glared at me like a tiger thirsting for blood! Oh! sir; you'd better turn in a fire alarm and let'em kick in all the doors and break in all the windows and flood the house. The rat must be killed before he commits some terrible deed!"

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.

Many persons—especially parents—object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's tonic does not involv this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor. 29m1

LADIES

In delicate health and all who suffer from habitual constipation will find the pleasant liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs more easily taken, and more beneficial in effect than any other remedy. THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.

Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in this world so adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition. 29m1

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. Wood, Bloomington, Ill.

For Twenty Years

I have been afflicted with rheumatism. Before 1883 I found no relief, but grew worse. I then began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and it did me more good than all the other medicine I ever had." H. T. Balcom, Shirley, Mass.

"I suffered from what the doctors called muscular rheumatism. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and am entirely cured." J. V. A. Proudfoot, letter carrier, Chicago, Ill.

A Woman's Question.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart, and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?

Do you know you have asked for the priceless thing
As a child might ask for a toy,
Demanding what others have died to win,
With the reckless dash of a boy?

You have written my lessons of duty out.
Man-like you have questioned me;
Now stand at the bar of my woman's soul
Until I shall question thee.

You require your mutton shall always be hot,
Your socks and your shirts be whole;
I require your heart shall be pure as God's stars,
And pure as Heaven your soul.

You require a cook for your mutton and beef;
I require a better thing;
A seamstress you're wanting for stockings and shirts—
I look for a man and a king.

A king for a beautiful realm called home,
And a man that the master, God,
Shall look upon as he did the first,
And say "It is very good."

I am fair and young, but the rose will fade
From my soft young cheek one day;
Will you love me then 'mid the fallen leaves,
As you did mid the bloom of May?

Is your heart an ocean so strong and deep
I may launch my all on its tide?
A loving woman finds Heaven or hell
On the day she is made a bride.

I require all things that are grand and true,
All things that a man should be;
If you give this all I would stake my life
To be all you demand of me.

If you cannot do this, a laundress and cook
You can hire with little to pay;
But a woman's heart, and a woman's life
Are not to be won that way.

MISS GLYNN'S ADVENTURE.

Many years ago there stood at the crossroads between Brixton and Crampton county an old farm house, built in a style that few of us remember, with large, cheerful rooms and windows that opened on to a carefully trimmed lawn. Roses and honeysuckles grew there in rich profusion, and in the fall, bright yellow chrysanthemums decked the garden beds.

A long shady avenue of trees so obscured the house that in midsummer, it seemed like 'a lodge in some vast wilderness' and so lonely that in spite of its beauties a timed person would have hesitated to buy it.

But Miss Glynn was not a timid person. She had lived twenty-five years in this vale of tears without encountering either ghosts or burglars, and she pursued the even tenor of her way through seed-time and harvest, without any apparent desire for companionship or relief from the monotony of her existence.

People said that she had had a romance early in her youth, which had ended in cruel disappointment, and that when her father died and left her sole possessor of the old homestead, she had decided to keep on living there, hiding from a curious world the one sorrow of her life.

However that may be, Miss Glynn kept her own secrets. The door of the closet which contained her skeleton was never open, and when anyone from the neighboring village did come to call on her, they found her cheerily at work, the house as neat as wax and every sign of a well-regulated household.

One night (I have this story from Miss Glynn's own lips) there was a wedding at Brixton, a hamlet some five miles distant, and her cook and housemaid, being related to the bride, desired to attend it.

There was no way for them to get there unless John Thorn, the farmer, drove them over and stayed to bring them back.

Now Miss Glynn, as I said before, was moreover, very indulgent to her farm hands, so she said, "You may go, I am not at all afraid to be left alone; only be sure and return in time for the morning's work."

In a wing of the old house slept Jim Sanford, the chore boy, a half-witted fellow, about fifteen years old, who would have been no use as a protector, but Miss Glynn laughingly unchained Don, the great watchdog, more to satisfy the servants than from any nervous fears of her own. And when the usual time came for retiring, she went up to her lonely room with as little dread of the shadows of night falling on the old house, as if a regiment of mounted dragoons kept guard outside her window.

She said that she must have fallen into a light doze, when something (she never knew what) awakened her. No moon shone in through the old-fashioned gabeled windows, and everything was plunged in that profound stillness which can be felt.

A peculiar consciousness of another presence in the room came over Miss Glynn. It oppressed her; she tried to shake it off, to think of something else—to go to sleep. The distant bark of a watchdog fell on her ear. She endeavored to weary herself by counting the barks—in vain; above and beyond all other ideas was the persistent and haunting one that in her chamber somewhere another human being was concealed.

Miss Glynn was an energetic woman; her resolves were but the preludes to immediate action. All of a sudden the darkness became intolerable to her, and without any actual fear, but more from a longing desire for a ray of light, she stretched out her hand to reach a match from the little table beside her bed, only to feel it gently but firmly grasped.

Not a cry escaped her, all her wonderful power of self-control came to her aid, and without struggling, she merely asked:

"Who is there?"

A [illegible] voice answered from beside [illegible]

[illegible]

She saw him then, a tall, handsome man, evidently a desperado; to be foiled, not struggled with.

Miss Glynn's wits were as ready as her presence of mind.

"Sir," said she, in the same polite tone he had adopted, "it is embarrassing for me rise and dress in the presence of a gentleman. I will accomodate you, but I must request that you step outside the door while I make my toilet."

With a bow her visitor left her, having glanced cautiously around the chamber to assure himself that she had no other means of exit, and took his post just outside in the old-fashioned hall, whistling softly to himself, or humming an air from one of the operas.

And she?—

During the five minutes in which she made her hasty toilet, Miss Glynn had not only hidden in her bosom a bunch of bank notes, but had laid her plans for checkmating the gentlemanly burglar.

"I am ready," said she, throwing open the door, and looking as trim and neat as if she had prepared herself for congenial company.

He glanced admiringly at her as she stood there, the flicker from the candle casting a glimmer of light [illegible] over her white dressing gown. [illegible] and smiling she met him, not a quiver in her voice, not a bit less color in her healthy cheeks.

Having produced a huge [illegible] quested, with many apologies, [illegible] shown the silver, with wh[illegible] his bag. Nothing escaped [illegible] old knife and fork given to her [illegible] baby by her grandfather, [illegible] valued as a relic.

One thing after another [illegible] into the capacious sack, all [illegible] brac, little ornaments, bits [illegible] last of all, her mother's w[illegible] he had only left that," cried [illegible] to herself, but (shaking [illegible] his back) "I will be even with him yet."

All this time the man [illegible] running fire of small talk, [illegible] mentary, interspersing it [illegible] with apologies for disturbing her rest.

Having at last crammed [illegible] into his sack nearly everything but a four post bedstead and the grand piano, he smiled and suggested refreshments.

Now was Miss Glynn's chance. She acceded to his request, offering him all the dainties the larder afforded, adding that he was welcome to what wine he could drink.

"We will finish with that, madam," said he, sitting on a flour barrel and dangling one leg, while he deliberately and daintily picked a chicken bone, helping himself now and then to some pickled olives, which he pronounced excellent.

"Madame," said he, [illegible] glance at her, "you are a very [illegible] person. I am proud to have met you; it is seldom in the paths of my profession I have met your equal in pluck, elegance of manner, beauty of expression and delightful conversation. What do you say to a union between us? I am poor but hon[illegible] with a fine appreciation of a joke, and you are too fair a flower to waste your sweetness on this desert air—yum, yum;" he mumbled, "these olives are like yourself—admirable."

"I feel much honored," said Miss Glynn. "Your proposal is flattery, but I should like some references."

"References! Madame, I have thousands of them. I have killed two men, served six years in Sing Sing for stealing a watch, and——"

"You are undoubtedly a remarkable person," said Miss Glynn, with an unpleasant conviction that he would add the murder of one woman to the two men in his next adventure if her wits failed her.

"We will talk of [illegible] when your appetite is satisfied. [illegible] chat at our ease."

"And you can sooth my savage breast with melody on that piano," he added with a bow. "And now for the wine, the sparkling wine! I was [illegible] poet in the days of my youth," he [illegible]. "Would you have thought it?"

"I would not," answered Miss Glynn, opening the door to the [illegible] Will you walk down with me [illegible] yourself?" turning round with [illegible] made all the brighter by the [illegible] of the tallow candle she carri[illegible]

"Ah—h——," cried he, smacking his lips, for down a flight of stone steps he beheld bin after bin of bottles, and in imagination he already tasted their fragrant contents. No fear of the weak woman by his side entered his brain; no memory of Jael occured to him. Down the stone stairs he tripped and went from one bottle to another, examining their lables as a bee sucks honey from a flower, she holding the light.

"These," said Miss Glynn, leading the way to the far end of the cellar, where there was one bin larger and deeper than the rest, in which were only two bottles, "these you will find in excellent condition. My father had them direct from Spain in the year —80, and they must be in magnificent order."

"What is the label?" he inquired, bending over, with the eye of a connoisseur, to examine it.

Like lightning she tripped up his heels and in he fell, headfirst, right into the bin, and blowing out the candle, she ran for her life to the cellar steps, up which she went quicker than she have ascended them before.

Breathless and panting she reached the top and shut the door, which closed only with a key. Her sense told her that she was now doubly in danger; he had been in good temper, but if he got out she would have to contend with a desperate ruffian. This frail door would be nothing to such a man; he could break it down like a reed.

With her frail strength the dauntless woman dragged the heavy dining table [illegible] that she piled [illegible] anything, every [illegible]

She said that in her life she never worked so hard or possessed such strength as when constructing that barricade between herself and utter destruction.

At this crisis she thought of Don, the great watch dog, and wondered at his silence.

Running to the back door, which she found wide open, she saw him dead at his post.

No time could she waste in sentimental regret, but as she returned to guard her fortress, the tears rushed to her eyes as she remembered the many lonely evenings she and Don had watched the dancing firelight in the old sitting room together, and how he had never failed to show her the most untiring and selfish devotion.

A weaker woman would have run away, but Miss Glynn was made of no such metal. The servants would be home at 4 o.clock; it was then 2 and during these intervening hours she proposed to remain and protect her property.

Seizing an old gun of her father's, which had always stood in the hall, she took her post at the cellar door, waiting for what might come. It was not loaded, but an empty gun has done wonders [illegible] and may again, she said to herself.

It was not long before the man found the steps and his way up them, and then [illegible] such a [illegible] at that door, [illegible] of [illegible] and curses, as [illegible] and which, she [illegible] ringing in her ears for many a long day afterward.

[illegible] alone, an [illegible] only an unloaded [illegible] to [illegible] against the ruffian.

[illegible] Providence [illegible] dining table protected her.

[illegible] a strong man, but he had taken a deep draught of wine before he came up, and he was more unsteady than when he went down, and when the servants came tired and sleepy from their wedding, they found her there, white [illegible], but firm as ever.

John Thorn took a horse, mounted it, and rode furiously to a neighgoring farm-house, and in twenty minutes three strong men opened that cellar door, and pinioned the hero of the night.

And Miss Glynn?

Oh, she got over the effects of her adventure, though she never afterward allowed her servants to leave her alone at night, and she told me that she always kept a loaded revolver by her bedside. And I know that story is true, for Miss Glynn was my aunt.

And the burglar?

Oh, he added another six years dissipation at Sing Sing to his former list of "References."

THE PROPER THING.

Undraped pleated or gathered skirts grow in favor.

Low corsages are in great favor for evening dresses.

Plush hats are especially fashionable for young girls and children.

Braid used on cloth dresses must be the exact shade of the material.

Bronze, violet, brown and plum are desirable colors in all the rich shades.

Smooth-surfaced materials should be finished with braid and stitching.

Tucked and shirred bonnets are as popular as they were thirty years ago.

Pink, pale green, and yellow dresses are largely used for evening toilettes.

Feathers are more popular than flowers for the garniture of evening dresses.

According to one authority, brown is the popular and only color to be worn this season.

Utility is the distinguishing feature this year of a lady's [illegible], from her bonnet to her shoe.

[illegible]

A black bonnet mingled with pink velvet with full tips of the same delicate tint, forms a very pretty evening bonnet.

The homespun suits of this season, both for men and women, are made of real, rough, woolen cottage-woven homespun, crude and unfinished in appearance.

Veils are coming to the fore again. Not the style that wore off the eyelashes and jeopardize the sight, but the longer and more graceful ones which hang from the edge of the bonnet to the chin, and the better the lace the more in style you will be.

VERY REMARKABLE RECOVERY.

Mr. Geo. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved, that she is able now to do her own work."

Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at R. E. Phillips.

There are over 100 Knights of Labor assemblies in Texas and they are being organized at the rate of one per day.

Santa Rosa has a remarkable town own clock. When the hour hand points at six and the clock strikes 17 the people then know that it is exactly 12 o'clock.

Fire,—Murder,—Rats.

A woman ran out of a house on Beaubien street the other day crying crying "fire" as loud as he could yell. A pedestrian who was passing by sprang up the steps and into the hall and being unable to see or smell smoke he turned to the gasping and excited woman and asked:

"Where is the fire? I don't see any signs of one."

"I—I didn't mean fire? I—I mean murder!" she replied.

"Is there a man in the house?"

"No sir."

"Who tried to murder you.

"Oh, I didn't mean murder, I guess; but the awfulest biggest rat you ever set eyes on chased our cat across the ketchen and then stood and glared at me like a tiger thirsting for blood! Oh! sir; you'd better turn in a fire alarm and let'em kick in all the doors and break in all the windows and flood the house. The rat must be killed before he commits some terrible deed!"

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.

Many persons—especially parents—object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's tonic does not involv this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor. 29m1

LADIES

THAT DIRTY DANDRUFF.

Dandruff is dirty and disagreeable in every way. It soils the clothing continually, and is accompanied by a hardly less annoying sensation of itching. The scalp is diseased. There is nothing in this world so adapted to this trouble as Parker's Hair Balsam. It cleanses and heals the scalp, stops the falling hair and restores its original softness, gloss and color. Is not oily, highly perfumed an elegant dressing. Very economical, as only a small occasional application keeps the hair in perfect condition. 29m1

Rheumatism

It is an established fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla has proven an invaluable remedy in many severe cases of rheumatism, effecting remarkable cures by its powerful action in correcting the acidity of the blood, which is the cause of the disease, and purifying and enriching the vital fluid.

It is certainly fair to assume that what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for others it will do for you. Therefore, if you suffer the pains and aches of rheumatism, give this potent remedy a fair trial.

A Positive Cure.

"I was troubled very much with rheumatism in my hips, ankles, and wrists. I could hardly walk, and was confined to my bed a good deal of the time. Being recommended to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, I took four bottles and am perfectly well. I cheerfully recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as one of the best blood purifiers in the world." W. F. In the Senate yesterday, Mr. Edmunds introduced a bill granting a pension to Mrs. Julia D. Grant.

Senator Hoar's Presidential succession bill which was killed by the Democratic senators last winter was again reported to the Senate on Monday. It has been slightly amended but the original intent is the same. The bill will be discussed in the senate, and it is expected to pass that body during the week.

It is believed that the President will not suffer much annoyance at the hands of the Senate in the confirmation of his appointments. However, it is quite evident that there is a disposition to confirm all nominations except those made to fill vacancies caused by dismissals resulting from charges preferred against Republican incumbents.

In his speech declining the nomination for the Presidency pro tem. of the Senate, John A. Logan declared that "the position is not to my taste." Inasmuch as the duties are identical with those of the Vice-Presidency, here is a frank intimation that Logan ran reluctantly for the second place in 1884, and would have been unsuited for the office if elected.—[Utica Observer.

Mr. Burchard is a Republican and has held the office for nearly sixteen years. We cannot see what collector Beach is thinking of, unless as the Palladium suggests, that the appointment is only temporary owing to Mr. Beach's inexperience with the details of the office. Unless this may be the case, Democrats of Oswego and especially the disappointed aspirants, may justly feel indignant. The office yields a snug salary.

The funeral of William H. Vanderbilt, the richest man in the world, took place on Friday from his late residence. The funeral services, which were held at the St. Bartholomew's church, were of the simplest nature. A number of Mr. Vanderbilt's most intimate friends were selected as pall bearers. A large assembly of men prominent in the financial world were present at the funeral. The remains were placed in a receiving vault in the New Dorp Cemetery, for the present, until the completion of the Vanderbilt mausoleum now being built. The example of simplicity set forth by the Vanderbilt family in the burial of their dead member is deserving of high commendation.

Board of Trustees' Proceedings

Fulton, Dec. 9, 1885.

Board met pursuant to adjournment.

Present, President Waugh and trustees Bradford Chase, Gage, Hulett and Johnson.

Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Mr. Wm. C. Stephens appeared before the Board and made a statement in regard to the Fulton & Oswego Rail Road Co. and presented the following petition and asked that the prayers of the petition be granted, to-wit:

To the President and Board of Trustees of the village of Fulton.

The Fulton & Oswego Railroad Co. proposes to make, direct, an independent connection with the Syracuse, Phœnix & Oswego railroad to Syracuse, having in view the construction of a railroad from Fulton to Oswego, and on such route as may hereafter be determined, and to build for the accomodation of its business and the public, a passenger and freight station at or near Broadway and Second streets in said village.

Your Board is therefore respectfully requested to grant by resolution or ordinance, permission to the said Fulton & Oswego Railroad Co. to build, maintain and operate its road upon a track parallel to the track of the New York, Ontario & Western railroad, across Fourth, Fay, Union, Lyon, Division, Pratt and State streets in said village.

From the intersection of said track with Second and Division streets, the said track of the Fulton & Oswego Railroad Co. to run on the west side of the track of the N. Y., O. & W. Railroad Co. through Second street to Broadway, at the same grade, and not less than seven feet west of the said track of the N. Y., O. & W. Railroad Co.

The said Fulton & Oswego Railroad Co. will construct all crossings and approaches to such crossings at the intersection of its track with said streets, and faithfully comply with the requirements of the Board of Trustees as to said crossings and the construction and maintenance thereof.—Dated Fulton Dec. 8, 1885.

Respectfully, H. M. Britton

Resolution, which was on motion adopted to-wit:

Resolved, That the Fulton and Oswego Railroad Company be and they are hereby permitted to make, grade and lay the track of their Railroad and operate the same within the village of Fulton, on a line parallel with the track of the New York, Ontario & Western Railway Company and across Fourth, Fay, Union, Lyon, Division and Pratt streets, and on and along Second street from Lyon street to Broadway on the west side of the track of the New York, Ontario & Western Railway Company and not less than seven feet therefrom, and the conditions of such permission being,

First, That the Fulton & Oswego Railroad Company shall make and maintain all crossings at the intersection of its track with said streets and to approaches thereto, shall construct and maintain all sluices and ditches necessary for the passage of water and the protection of the streets intersected as aforesaid at the place of such intersection, and made necessary by the construction of said road, and shall at all times fully and faithfully perform all requirements of the Board of Trustees of the village of Fulton, relating to obligations hereinbefore set forth.

Second, That nothing in the foregoing grant of permission to said Fulton & Oswego Railroad Company shall be deemed in any manner to in[illegible] any [illegible] for damages of any person or corporation by reason of the laying of said [illegible] the operation [illegible] of said railroad.

Washington Letter.

[illegible] Washington, Dec. [illegible], 1885.

The forty-ninth congress is now five days old. Its opening scenes were repetitions of those at other openings for years past. Eager crowds flocked to the capitol, undetermined whether to lend their presence to the Senate or the House of Representatives. There were many handshakings among the old members, and as usual, the new ones were conspicuous for their self-conscious attempts to appear statesmanlike and at ease.

The session began with 320 Representatives present, and 64 Senators. This is considered excellent attendance for the first day. Speaker Carlisle took his seat as presiding officer at one end of the capitol, and Senator Sherman at the other.

In the Senate, the sombre drapery around the chamber, in memory of Vice-President Hendricks, contrasted markedly with the gay floral gifts which covered the desks of many Senators, and the vari-colored costumes in the galleries.

The first day was taken up by the House in organizing, swearing in the Members, and drawing seats. As usual at the lottery of seats, the Members retired behind the circle of desks and waited impatiently, like so many school boys, while a blindfolded page drew from a box the numbered marbles which corresponded to the numbers attached to their names.

The second day's session was devoted principally to the reading of the President's message in both the Senate and House. It occupied one hour and forty minutes. It was a much longer document than was expected. Senators listened attentively to the message, and the President's course in devoting more than one fifth of it to a review of the silver question, was commented upon. The absence of any recommendation respecting the internal revenue was criticised. Approval of the Mexican commercial treaty was received with surprise. The absence of any argument for subsidies was a disappointment in the lobby. The Indian policy was approved by those interested in the civilization of the red man.

The President's treatment of the Mormon question met with almost unanimous approval. It created some stir among the representatives of the Mormon church in this city. As soon as that part of the message was read, Delegate Caine, of Utah, ran out into the lobby and held a hurried consultation with the man who is understood to be the Mormon lobby agent. Then Mr. Caine hastily prepared a dispatch to the mayor of Salt Lake City, telling him that the President was inflexible in support of the anti-polygamy laws.

During the reading of the message in the house, scarcely a member left his seat for the first hour. Most of them paid close attention, but when the reading went into the second hour, seats began to be vacated on the Republican side of the hall.

Comments upon the message from Representatives were varied and characteristic. When Mr. Randall was asked how he liked it he replied, "Very much. Very much." Representative Long from Massachusetts said: "Of course I like it, it's long." The Republican Members generally said: "It is sound and clear on Silver and Civil Service, but on the Tariff, vague and unsatisfactory." On the whole it may be said that there is nothing in the document to precipitate a conflict among the Democrats in opposition to the Executive.

The Congress which began this week has an opportunity to make for itself a great name. How far it will improve its chances can be told better when it adjourns next summer. Weighty subjects call for settlement. Besides these questions alluded to above in connection with the message may be mentioned the protection of the public domain, foreign immigration, the succession to the Presidency, railroad legislation, the treatment of the private claimant, a national bankrupt law, strengthening the Navy, and a dozen other important matters. The Senate has already set several of these measures in motion. The House has received a flood of bills, old and new, but no real work must be expected of that body until it can revise its working rules. This may consume all the time prior to the Holiday vacation.

Our readers are cautioned about buying medicines which are not endorsed by some well known druggist. H. C. Gisler, has made a thorough study of Blood diseases, and after a careful investigation, and many practical tests, positively asserts that Acker's Blood Elixir will cure all blood disorders, ridding the system of its impurities, and leaving it strong, vigorous and healthy. he will warrent it. It is a certain cure or all skin diseases. 27eow

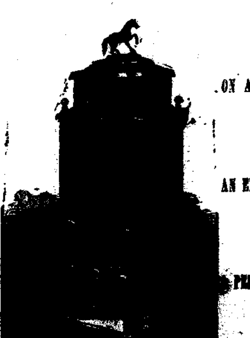
—THE—
Howe Ventilating Stove.



A NEW STOVE. ON A NEW PRINCIPLE.
A HANDSOME STOVE. AN EXCELLENT HEATER.
AN ECONOMICAL STOVE. PERFECT VENTILATOR.

A good Base Burner of any kind will heat a room, but it also destroys and burns up the life principle of the air. Foul air if hot will not keep a person warm. The Howe Ventilating Stove warms the room and keeps the air pure. It Ventilates the room at the same time that it heats it. Cold, fresh air is taken into the Stove through a pipe from the outside of the house. Fresh air passes into the Stove, is heated and passes into the room through the open top, while the foul, impure air being heavier than fresh, pure heated air drops dead to the floor, is forced into a flue in the Stove and is drawn through a small pipe in the smoke pipe into the chimney and escapes with the smoke.

[illegible] Books.

[illegible] several gentlemen, [illegible] District Attorney [illegible] and T. A. Gage were discussing the VanValkenburg trial, then in progress in Oswego. It appears that on the trial Chas. Harris, who is serving a sentence at Auburn, swore that VanValkenburg told him that the doors of the stores that had been burglarized were opened with a knife blade. Merely to satisfy their curiosity the above named gentlemen went to the door in question, and Mr. Gage succeeded in opening the lock without any difficulty, as Harris said VanValkenburg had. At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Gage was subpoened by the District Attorney to appear at Oswego. The summons caused some astonishment and no little merriment among the party. It was afterwards ascertained that a large number of store doors in town could easily be opened in the same way. Quite a flutter of excitement was caused among the merchants by the discovery that for a long time their doors had been locked about as safely as a string wound around a nail would fasten them. The hardware stores did quite a business in the lock and key line.

The Postoffice.

The candidates for the coveted Fulton postoffice are coming down the homestretch. S. B. Whitaker, Willis Ney and T. D. Richards are neck-and-neck apparently, each striving to be first under the wire. The long agony will soon be over. All the button-holing to sign petitions, the laying awake nights, the influence brought to bear upon the powers that be, will have availed nothing—to the disappointed ones. Rumor says that a dark horse has lately appeared in the field and that his prospects are excellent for the appointment. He is said to have a faithful ally in Washington who has access to the President's ear, and hope is said to have risen high in the candidate's breast. May the best man win.

VanValkonburg Found Guilty.

The case of the people against Frank VanValkenburg, of this village, who was indicted for burglary in the third degree and petit larceny, was called in the County court in Oswego Saturday. Hon. N. W. Nutting appeared for the prisoner. Charles Harris, who was with VanValkenburg on the night of the 28th of last March when they burglarized the store of John Robinson in this village, and who pleaded guilty and was sentenced to Auburn prison, was in court and testified to the facts. The jury retired at twelve o'clock and returned an hour after with a verdict of guilty of burglary in the third degree. He will be sentenced the latter part of this week.

The face of Robert Newton is wreathed in smiles. A daughter came last week.

The Street Railway.

The building of the Fulton and Oswego Falls street railroad is now an assured fact. The contract which some time ago was sent to New York, has been returned signed by the contractors. By the terms of the contract the road must be built and in operation by June 1st, next. The cars to be used will be equal to any in use, and the whole equipment of the road will be first-class. The building of the road will probably commence early in the spring.

To Our Readers.

With the opening of the new year we shall commence the publication of a series of letters written by the late Zenas Emory during his service in the late war. He enlisted in the 110th N. Y. State Infantry from this village with many other defenders of the Union, some of whom are still living. The letters number about one hundred and are of a very interesting nature, giving a lengthy account of the "Banks expedition." We have been favored with these letters by W. W. Hill, who is at present residing in Syracuse.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Abbey's Double Uncle Tom's Cabin Company opened their week's engagement last evening at the Globe Theatre to an overflowing house, standing room not being available after eight o'clock. The larger portion of the audience was composed of ladies and children, who, as usual, cried over the death of Eva. But the comicalities of the two Topsy's and the eccentricities of the two lawyers, Marks Sr. and Jr. brought forth screams of delight. The remarkable sagacity exhibited by the trained Russian Bloodhounds was a complete surprise and elicited a perfect storm of applause.—[Boston Globe, April 18th

The above company will appear at Stephens Opera House, next Tuesday evening, December 22.

A Mysterious Box.

A strange man was about the village of Hannibal for several days during the past week. He claimed to be waiting for an express package but it did not come and he went away. Tuesday a box six feet long and three or four feet wide and deep arrived. It was opened and found to contain a complete set of burglar's tools and a partition large enough for a man to stand in.

Those present were favored with music by Misses Alice Stephens and Cora Foster. These socials will be held regularly during the winter and a cordial invitation is extended to all young people who care to attend.

As will be seen by the trustee's proceedings published elsewhere, the Board has granted the right of way through the village to the Fulton and Oswego railroad company. It is proposed to build an independent road from the junction to Oswego. The route has not as yet been determined upon. From the junction to Broadway it will run parallel to the N. Y., O. & W. track. A passenger station and freight house will be built at or near the corner of Broadway and Second streets.

The Phœnix Register of last week says that a meeting of the directors of the Phœnix road was held in New York on Tuesday at the general office of the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg company to ratify the lease of the road through that village to the company which has operated it since its opening. The term of the lease is for 100 years, and the conditions are that the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg company guarantee principal and interest on $175,000 of bonds of the road, the balance of the issue, amounting to $350,000, to be cancelled. Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. New Year's Calls.

An effort was made last year by some of our society people to renew the custom of New Year's calling. It was successful, and at that time many expressed the desire to continue the custom this coming New Year's day. We have already been questioned in regard to the matter. Quite a number of ladies have expressed there intention of keeping open house New Year's day. We believe that with a little effort or wakening up, the good old New Year's day will come with all its former jollity. In order to afford as much information as possible we shall publish a list of those who will receive this year and at what places, and cause the same to be copied in Syracuse and Oswego papers so that friends in those cities may know who are receiving at Fulton. We learn that the young gentlemen are already making preparations to appear in varied costume. All those who are intending to receive will please send their names to this office by December 29.

FACTS FOR FARMERS.

For cleaning cans, pans wooden utensils, etc., nothing equals steam, and nothing is more convenient.

Most farmers believe that the seeds ought to be removed from pumpkins before the latter are fed to milch cows.

Most of the experiments made in feeding swine with cooked and raw food have not shown sufficient difference in favor of the former to pay for the extra labor required.

Sulphur and powdered copperas, each five pounds, wood ashes, two bushels, all mixed together and placed under shelter within reach of the hogs, will do the latter good by way of keeping them free from worms and lice.

An abundant growth to the wheat crop in autumn is not desired, as all that is required is root formation sufficient to give it a good stand in order to make a nearly a start in the spring. The heavier the growth now the more subject the crops to the drawbacks of winter.

An English dairy supply company has devised a package for conveying butter by rail, to contain sixty half-pound pots. The package consists of a double case, the inner one of tin for the butter, and the outer one of wood, the intervening space being filled with moss, so that the butter may be kept cool and unaffected by the temperature to which it may be exposed while carried.

Some wide-awake apiarist has discovered that old queen bees, like old hens, are not profitable, and for the same reason, viz: That they do not lay so many eggs. There was perhaps sound sense in the old fashion plan of destroying the old colonies every two or three years and keeping only the new swarms. But perhaps we can now rejuvenate old swarms by introducing new queens. If so, it will be an important point gained in bee culture.

A Strange Story.

Bishop J. J. Moore, of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church told a strange story at a recent meeting held by him in Rock hill, S. C. The Bishop was born a slave in Virginia in 1815, his name being Benjamin Clawson and his owner being the father of Dr. Chas. Clawson, of Chester, S. C., who bought the Bishop's mother at a sale, she having been carried from Pennsylvania into Virginia and sold at the age of 16 years. A few Quakers who lived in the neighborhood of Mr. Clawson after hearing the woman's story, of being kidnapped, advised her to run away across the line into Pennsylvania. She took their advice, but was overtaken. She again made the attempt. She had 8 children with her, one the present Bishop, wrapped in a blanket which was lost. She then wrapped him in her skirt and carried him safely into Pennsylvania. The other children were captured, one of them being Dicie Clawson, the sister whom the bishop met on Saturday for the first time since their separation sixty-two years ago. Mr. Clawson a few years ago moved from Virginia to Fort Mill township, S. C., and took with him the sister, Dicie Clawson, and she has been living in that township ever since, being now 78 years old. Bishop Moore preached near Fort Mill and mentioned the circumstance of the mother's escape with him. One of his sister's daughters was present and related the facts to her mother, who remarked that her mother had carried her little brother Benjamin in the same way. The Rev. Mr. Walker, pastor of the church, called to see Dicie and during the conversation mentioned that Bishop Moore was formerly called Benjamin Clawson, but had his name changed to J. J. Moore. She at once said. "He is my brother," and hearing that he would be in attendance at the conference now in session, she called to see the bishop.

SICK HEADACHE.

There is a great difference between this and the ordinary headache which passes off quickly. Sick headache is accompanied with nausea and other bad feelings, which show that the stomach and liver are out of order. It is pleasant and at the same time time astonishing to see how quickly sick headache yields to a dose of Herrick's Liver Pills, Begin with the first symptoms of sick headache. These pills, being sugar coated, are delightful to take, even by the most delicate ladies.

"Oh, papa, they are fighting, please take me away, "was the agonizing cry of a very pretty young lady as she beheld the stock brokers on Wall street in an excitement over the serious drop in Union Pacific and Western Union stock Wednesday afternoon. Papa endevored to calm her, but she wouldn't be calmed, and fainted away. The party are said to belonged in Worchester. [Worchester Spy.

EXCITEMENT IN TEXAS.

Great excitement has been caused in the vicinity of Paris, Tex., by the remarkable recovery of Mr. J. E. Corley, who was so helpless he could not turn in bed, or raise his head; everybody said he was dying of Consumption. A trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery was sent him. Finding relief, he bought a large bottle and a box of Dr. King's New Life Pills; by the time he had taken two boxes of Pills and two bottles of the Discovery, he was well and had gained in flesh thirty-six pounds.

A Washington letter says:

One of Secretary Lamar's characteristics is sympathy for inebriates. This kind of philanthropy, however, has its drawbacks.

The other day an individual tottered into a street-car where the Secretary was riding. The first thing he did was to throw a dollar through the opening in the front door. By and by the driver passed back the change done up in a little package. Pretty soon the driver opened the door and called out sharply: "Put in your fare."

The drunken man stared, but didn't move.

People began to titter.

"Never mind,' said Mr, Lamar, looking benovolently at the befogged passenger, "I'll fix it up for you;" and he stepped up and put a nickle in the box.

The situation was still misty, but the drunken man recognized that in some way the Secretary had done him a friendly act. He extended his hand, and Lamar shook it, saying:

"That's all right."

The drunken man gazed steadily and earnestly at his benefactor for nearly five minutes. Then a broad grin spread over his face as he reached out his hand and said:

"How d'ye do, General Butler? I thought I knowd yer; fit with yer at New Orleans.

Mr. Lamar accepted the hand again, but with less suavity.

"I know'd yer," continued the drunken man, and he kept on grinning while people began to snicker.

"You don't think he takes me for Ben Butler, do you?" asked Mr. Lamar rather painfully, of a friend [illegible] sat beside him.

The Secretary wasn't [illegible] in doubt, for after another hand [illegible] the drunken man delightedly pointed to his left optic and broke out with—

"Got yer eye fixed since we was at New Orleans, hain't yer?"

Mr. Lamar dropped [illegible] at the next corner, with an effort to look responsive to the smiles which followed him.

Good Advice to Young Men.

The late Edward Pierpoint, who distinguished himself as secretary of the American Legation at Rome, once received a letter from his father which contained the following advice:

Dress like a gentleman; never be peculiar or flashy, but dress as becomes you, not as becomes someone else. Never talk about your expenses or your money, and never be ashamed to live with economy; on the contrary be proud of it. Your business now is to acquire knowledge, and you need not be anxious to display yours, especially to older men, but always try to learn of them.

Never say to another what it would be unpleasant to have him say to you.

Remember that good manners are of great importance. Manners should be frank and easy, with dignity.

Avoid fawning, toading ways as you would the foul fiend. Never fawn to a prince or swagger to a peasant. Be courteous and manly everywhere and to everybody.

Let your manners be quiet; nothing is more under-bred than a flurrid address, with a face wrinkled all over with grinning delight.

The countenance can express pleasure and welcome without idiotic contortions, and when these appear, whether in the son of a duke or a drayman, they are intensely vulgar.

You cannot have good manners in the drawing room, if your habitual manner is bad; the habit will betray you; let the habit be always good.

Far better that frigid look even, than that you degrade your countenance with silly hilarity.

Be a gentleman, feel like a gentleman, and you will look and act like one.

Sometimes you will feel neglected, and your vanity may feel wounded. Never let this annoy you. Be absolutely sure that in due time all will come right, and that you will have all the consideration that you merit. No one can do you any permanent injury but yourself. The world is so constituted that it is not in man's power to withhold respect from lofty character, real ability, and good conduct.

Vastly superior to all other external remedies. The complete pain allaying virtues of fresh Hops combined with strengthening Gums and Burgundy Pitch. 25c.

A Woman Fights a Duel.

In Russian Poland a lady recently became her own champion by fighting a duel with the man who had calumniated her. It appears he had offered his hand, which she had refused. Stung by her rejection, he set himself to spoil her good name by spreading false reports about her. Thereupon this plucky lady declared that a duel alone could vindicate her honor, and, refusing the assistance of several gentlemen who were anxious to make her cause their own, she invited her traducer to "pistols for two and coffee for one.' There was nothing for the man to do but accept the challenge, and the combatants met in a place outside of Warsaw. Both missed their aim. The lady proposed a second shot, but the seconds declared that full reparation had been made, and she had to defer to their ruling. As for her adversary, he was so moved by her masculine gallantry that he tendered her a formal and ample apology on the spot. She accepted it.

THE FIRST KEEN TWINGE.

As the season advances, the pains and aches by which rheumatism makes itself known, are experienced after every exposure. It is not claimed that Hood's Sarsaparilla is a specific for rheumatism —we doubt if there is, or can be, such a remedy. But the thousands benefitted by Hood's Sarsaparilla, warrant us in urging others who suffer from rheumatism to take it before the first keen twinge.

A Help to Good Digestion.

In the British Medical Journal Dr. W. Roberts, of England, discusses the effect of liquors, tea, coffee and cocoa on digestion. All of [illegible] the chemical processes, but most of them [illegible] late the glandular activity and muscular contractions. Distilled spirits retard the salivary or peptic digestion but slightly when sparingly used.

Wines were found to be highly injurious to salivary digestion. On peptic digestion all wines exert a retarding influence. They stimulate the glandular and muscular activity of the stomach. Effervescent wines exert the greatest amount of good with the least harm to digestion. When one's digestion is out of order everything goes awry, unless, as in the case of T. T. Seals, of Belaire, Ohio, who had bad dyspepsia for seven years, the digestive apparatus is kept in apple-pie-eating order by Warner's Tippecanoe the best appetite producer and regulator in the world.

Tea, even in minute quantities, completely paralyzes the action of the saliva. The tanning in strong tea is injurious. Weak tea should be used, if at all. Strong coffee and cocoa are also injurious if used in excess.—[The Cosmopolitan.

In order that our town shall have the best goods possible, the popular druggist, H. C. Giesler has arranged to sell Acker's English Prescriptions, among which is Acker's Dyspepsia Tablets. 'There are those banisters all finger marks again,' said Mrs. Cary, as she made haste with a soft linen cloth to polish down the shining oak again. 'George,' she said with a flushed face, as she gave the cloth a decided wrench out of the basin of suds, 'if you go up those stairs again before bedtime you will be punished.' 'I should like to know where I am to go?' said George. 'I cannot stay in the kitchen, I am so much in the way, and I cannot go into the parlor for fear I'll muss that up; and now you say I cannot go up to my own room. I know of a grand place where I can go,' he added to himself; 'boys are never told they are in the way there, and we can have lots of fun. I'll go to Nil's corner, I can smoke a cigar now as well as any boy, if it did make me awful sick the first time. They shall not laugh at me again about it.'

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT.

A STORY OF CHRISTMAS EVE.

"Now, Charlie dear, do make it go as far as you can," said little Mrs. Rushton, as she counted a roll of crisp, green bills into her husband's hand as they stood in the cottage door one Christmas eve.

Charlie received them quite nonchalantly, never once thinking, perhaps, how many weary stitches that pale, patient little woman at his side had earned them with—stitches made in the dead midnight hours, when he and the little ones were fast asleep. He twisted them together and stuffed them into his vest pocket.

Mrs. Rushton sighed, and looked wistfully out into the stormy gloom.

"There are so many things we need," she said. "If I could have gone myself; but baby is too ill for that," glancing backward at the crib in one corner. "So Charlie, do the best you can. There's the medicine for the baby—don't, pray, forget that—and some coal, and a little sugar and tea, and a few loaves of bread. And I did want a turkey for to-morrow—a small one, you know, Charlie; and a few plums to make a pudding. We can't afford it well, but it seems so hard for you and the children to have nothing for Christmas."

Charlie moved restlessly, but her thin, labor-worn hand held his arm.

"And some little trifles for the children, dear," she went on; "the poor little things will be hanging up their stockings to-night, and it hurts me so to disappoint them. Get a few candies, and a knife for Tom, and a doll for Annie—some little things that won't cost much, Charlie."

He shook her hand from his arm, and hurried out.

"Yes, yes," he replied, half impatiently, "I'll do it all if you don't keep me here all night."

"And Charlie," she called, as he strode away, her voice full of touching entreaty, "please don't stay long; baby is so ill, and will need her medicine in an hour; and I thought we would fix up a bit when the children get to bed. You will come back soon, dear?"

"Oh, [illegible] Mary, yes."

But Mary watched him out of sight, with a glimmer of tears in her patient eyes. "I wish I could have gone myself," she sighed, as she returned to her baby's cradle. "Poor Charlie; I do hope he will be as good as his word."

She sat down, with her foot on the rocker and took up her work-basket. There was never an idle moment for her, not even on Christmas eve. The babe slept, its cheek hot and flushed, its breath coming in quick, short gasps. Presently the children came in from the pine ridge, beyond the village, where they had been to gather wood for the fire.

"We've got a lot, mother," said Tom, a sturdy little fellow, the image of his father. We'll have a rousing fire on Christmas, won't we Annie?"

Annie nodded and crept into the corner holding her little red hands to the fire.

"I'm not cold," said Tom. "Girls are so tender, mother—let Annie stay in. I'll feed the cow and get in the water—I'm in for Christmas work I am! Say, mother, shall we have any goodies to-morrow?"

His mother smiled.

"We must wait and see," she said. [illegible] telling what Santa Claus [illegible]

Slowly and wearily the hours wore on, and with every moment the storm seemed to increase. At last she heard the village bells striking for midnight. At the same moment a feeble little moan from the crib made her start to her feet.

The babe was growing worse, its breath came now in short gasps, and its little face began to wear a strange, purplish pallor. The poor mother caught it up with a stifled cry. Then she ran to the bed where Tom was lying fast asleep, and dreaming, no doubt, of what the long-hoped-for-to-morrow would bring.

"Tom, Tom!" she cried, shaking him gently, "get up, dear—you must run for your father, for I'm afraid baby's dying." The sturdy little fellow was on his feet in an instant.

"The saloon, mother?" he inquired, significantly, with a strange look of sorrowful humiliation in his young eyes, as he quickly drew on his warm jacket.

"Yes, Tom! And be sure you bring him; and if there's any money left, run by the apothecary's and get the medicine—but it's too late now! Be quick, now, Tom. How very dark it is! I'll wake Annie to go with you, if your's afraid."

"No, mother, she shan't go out in this storm—I'm not afraid!" and away the manly little fellow went, out into the wild, stormy midnight.

The mother sat down and held the dying babe close to her bosom. And this was the night for which she had worked, and hoarded and hoped for so long! [illegible]

An hour passed, and little Tom returned, drenched and shivering.

"He's there, mother," he half sobbed, "but he won't come, and the money's all gone, he says. I come by the apothecary's, but he wouldn't let me have the medicine. Oh, mother, what shall we do?"

"Heaven knows, my boy," said his mother, as the breathing form on her bosom grew more convulsive, put on more wood and wake Annie, then you had better run back. The child's dying—tell your father so."

Tom obeyed. Another hour went by, and above the din of the storm, above the sobs of little Annie, the waiting wife caught the sound of that heavy, unsteady footstep. He was coming, but it was too late. The babe that she held so closely to her poor, aching heart, was now past all earthly suffering. She arose, and laid it in its crib, and crossed the little, waxen hands upon the pulseless bosom. Then she rose to meet her husband.

He staggered in, pale and abashed, and half desperate. She pointed in silence to the little, marble face on the cradle pillow.

"Your work," she said, hoarsely. "You have killed my baby. The medicine might have saved her! Where's my money that I worked so hard for?"

The shock half sobered him, and he answered, defiantly:

"I went to the saloon and gambled it away. You might have known that I would."

This poor wife had spirit and temper enough beneath her meekness and patience, and it blazed up fiercely now. She turned to push him from her in bitter anger and disgust, but the sight of his face arrested her. A bloated, brutal drunkard's face, but the face of her own husband; the face that had won her years before, in her happy girlhood; the face that was so noble and manly, when the village bell rang in honor of their wedding day. A sudden gush of tenderness melted her heart.

"Oh, Charlie," she sobbed, "how can you break my heart, and I love you so!"

His face whitened to the hue of death and his breast heaved convulsively.

"Don't," he cried, hoarsely, as he tore [illegible] her arms and [illegible] was gone—out in the storm and darkness.

The mother dressed her little one with her own hands in its daintiest robes, with knots of ribbon at the [illegible] shoulders, and a fall of misty lace [illegible] tiny, white throat. A Cynical View of the Younger Vanderbilts.

The Vanderbilt family is not a particularly brilliant one. It is easy to understand that the own sons of the late William H. may well be men of ordinary brain power, but it is rather a striking fact that none of his daughters' husbands [illegible] prominence or position. Sloan, the husband of the eldest daughter, has acquired no other distinction than that which usually clings to the keeper of a carpet store, and the name of Elliott F. Shepard will ring down the ages as a man who was unable to achieve a mild position in the law, despite stupendous backing. The name of Twombly will pass on to disappear in time as that of a man who was unknown save as a son-in-law of a rich father-in-law, and Dr. Webb, who married the youngest of the four daughters, has not shown any signs of ever becoming a great man. He was one of the surgeons in St. Luke's hospital when he met Miss Vanderbilt, who visited the hospital with her mother—one of the most kindly, charitable and domestic of women—to see the patients. Young Dr. Webb made himself agreeable to the ladies, and eventually married the great heiress. If the four sons-in-law of the late William H. Vanderbilt are men of small caliber it must be said that they are quite up [illegible] sons themselves. [illegible] is a long [illegible] grave and though [illegible] precise carriage. [illegible] Sunday school [illegible] at night. His [illegible] great attraction to [illegible] He [illegible] lady who formerly resided [illegible] Cincinnati. His other brother, William K. married a woman from Savannah. The sons of Vanderbilt family were no more fortunate than the daughters in choosing eligible partners for life. Of course I a speaking in a strictly worldly sense now and refer only to the social advantages and the social importance of the various marriages in the Vanderbilt family. With one exception they have all been happy, so far as the world knows, which is saying a great deal perhaps. Still the [illegible] of the richest man in the world in no wise distinguished themselves by their matrimonial alliances. William K., the second son of the old man, is a most profound lover of everything that is English. His accent is inscrutable, somber and grand, and his horses and traps are modeled with the utmost exactness on the thoro'ly accepted standards of the most horsey of London sets. Frederick, the next son, is simply and plainly a nonentity, and like most nonentities he is pleasant and good natured. There his good qualities end. The dead millionaire centered most of his hopes in his youngest son, George. It is the general opinion that he was wise in this, for George Vanderdilt is by all odds the most promising of the Vanderbilt boys. He resembles very much that other fortunate young millionaire, George Gould, in that he is quiet and subdued in manner and without conceit of any sort.—[New York correspondence Brooklyn Eagle.

"Do you mean to tell me I lie?" asked the Californian. "I tell you I stepped on your toe."

"We called to demand satisfaction."

The other Americans, anticipating fun, had dropped in.

"Very well, sir, When and where?"

"Here and now," said the Californian.

"You are, but——"

"And I can choose any weapons."

"Certainly but——"

"All right. Here you are."

And he brought out a pair of boxing gloves.

"Put 'em on and we'll have it here."

The Frenchman could not but accept. The door was locked and their honor was satisfied by both principal and second being knocked about so fearfully that they kept their beds for a week. But they had their revenge, for they put the police on the Americans' track and worried them so that they got out of Paris.—[San Francisco Chronicle.

CONGRESS has adjourned until the fifth of January.

THE next Governor of New Jersey will have the appointment of six Supreme Court Judges.

THE Postmaster-General has issued an order forbidding hereafter the appointment of any person over thirty-five years of age in the railway mail service.

THE New York Board of Trade has sent out 50,000 circulars stating reasons why the coinage of the Bland silver dollar should cease, and has 50,000 more in process of mailing to different parts of the country.

FROM the many comments in our New York State exchanges on the appointment of John A. Barry as postmaster at Oswego, we are convinced from their tone that the press of both parties are very well satisfied with this appointment.

WE invite attention to a notice which will be found elsewhere in these columns, requesting all persons having claims against the Syracuse, Phœnix and Oswego railroad for right of way or land damages of any kind, to forward them before the first of the year.

HON WM. C. PIERREPONT, L L. D., died Sunday morning at his home at Pierrepont Manor, Jefferson county, in the 83d year of his age. Mr. Pierrepont inherited 50,000 acres of land in Jefferson and Oswego counties and devoted himself to the care of his property. He was a pioneer in building the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg railroad and was for a long time president of that company. He was a director in the Jefferson County bank and in many other corporations. The funeral will take place at 3 p. m. December 23.

THE commissioner of pensions has issued an order, that from and after the first day of January next, claimants shall be required, before pension agents withhold any portion of the attorneys fees certified by the commissioner of pensions, to make an affidavit, stating with reasonable detail the time and manner of payment. The order further provides that where claimants are unable to make the affidavits in the form prescribed, and in the opinion of the pension agent a reasonable doubt exists as to the fact of such prior payment, that fact shall be certified to the commissioner of pensions for his consideration and decision.

THE frequent warnings against eating raw and imperfectly cooked pork seem to be of little avail to prevent trichinosis. A number of cases have already been reported this fall and winter. The latest victim is a young girl at Xenia, Ohio, the daughter of James Dunn. She died in great agony, her physicians not recognizing the true character of the disease. An examination of portions of muscle after death showed that it swarmed with trichinæ. There is no safety except thorough cooking. A certain percentage of swine are affected, and the chances of partaking of the affected are too great to permit any carelessness.—[Rochester Democrat.

THE controversy over the organization of the Legislature has not developed that unity of sentiment for a second term for Warner Miller in the United States Senate, which his friends immediately after the election predicted would be displayed. Mr. Miller will not be the only candidate on the Republican side for United States Senator next year. Congressman Frank Hiscock has announced to his friends that he has been giving way for different men in his party about as long as he intends to, intimating that he has given way to other parties to be nominated for Governor and elected to the Senate, and does not propose to continue that role any longer. He has discovered that instead of securing the aid of the men in whose interest he has stepped aside, he has been opposed by them and he believes that he saw the hand of Warner Miller against him when he desired a complimentary nomination in the recent Congress caucus at Washington. Mr. Hiscock and his friends are now against Mr. Miller, and are doing all that they can to prevent Mr. Miller securing any credit or assistance in his efforts for a second term out of the organization of the new State Senate—Utica letter in New York Sun.

Gen. Beauregard will give a history of the Shiloh Campaign in the January number of the North American Review. He claims that Gen Algernon Sydney Johnson acted only as a corps commander at Shiloh. Gen. [illegible] minds and take [illegible] of a large portion of the community. Many people are wise enough to follow the advice of the merchants in buying early, thus avoiding the great rush and having at the same time the benefit of selection from complete assortments. This activity will go on and increase, until it reaches its climax the night before Christmas.

Capitol Hill too has been made lively during the past week by the people's Representatives although the Senate has given itself to little else than a Temperance debate and the Presidential succession bill, which it passed; while the House has been confined to the seemingly dull subject of a new code of rules. Startling revelations were made regarding whisky in the Senate committee rooms, however, and in the House Mr. Randall, the Chairman of the powerful appropriations committee, was sharply attacked because of his own willingness to have his own wings clipped.

As I have probably mentioned before, all the less fortunate members of Congress are more or less envious of the fifteen men who compose the Committee on Appropriations. All Congressmen are anxious to make appropriations and a large majority of them favor that feature of the new code of rules which distributes the Appropriation bills among different committees.

Mr. Randall holds that such a disposition of his bills would lead to unparalleled corruption and extravagance, something that has never been charged upon his committee. But members talk about the prosperous growth of the country, and argue that the appropriations should keep pace with it. They also talk about individual honesty and capacity. They say, "Why should fifteen men assume all the honesty and economy of the House?"

This discussion of rules will most likely consume the entire week, if not a longer time, and though the new code may not pass in its pesent shape, it will probably be adopted with amendments. Those who want to get on the several Appropriations committees, will vote for it, those who favor some of the other propositions involved in it will vote for it, those who want to beat Mr. Randall will vote for it, and those who want some change and don't know just what it is will vote for it. This category includes a majority of the House.

During this discussion Mr. Randall had received some very hard personal thrusts regarding his official course and his management of the people's money. On more than one occasion he was tempted to lose his temper, than which there is nothing a statesman can so ill afford to be without. In debate he mentioned that notwithstanding the fact that President Arthur had declared in his message against it, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the Forty-seventh Congress had a large [illegible] publican member sprang to his feet at this point and declared that it was the most injudicious and uncalled-for act of ex-president Arthur's administration. "My four Republican colleagues and myself," said he, "voted for that appropriation and we came back to the House." "Well," replied Mr. Randall, "I voted against it, and I believe I too came back to this House."

In the Senate prohibition was sprung by the proposition to prohibit the sale, exhibition or use of liquors in the Capitol restaurants. It led to an animated and rather farcical discussion of temperance, in which Senators Cockrell, Vest, Ingalls, Frye, Maxey, Saulsberry. Manderson and Teller took part.

Senator Cockrell of Missouri made some grave charges of dissipation in the committee rooms. He had also seen Senators so completely under the influence of whisky in the discussions that for the sake of decency the Senate had adjourned. He volunteered to give names if senators desired them, at which proposition there was laughter.

Senator Frye of Maine said no reform had ever made such strides as Temperance. He had been in the Senate six years but had never seen two Senators in the condition indicated by Mr. Cockrell, he did not know that he had ever seen one unfit for business. Personally he wanted to see all liquors excluded from the Capitol, but temperance people could not get all the temperance they wanted, they had to take all they could get. The old rule prohibiting the sale of fermnted liquors in the Capitol was adhered to.

A Relic from the President's Household.

There is on exhibition in the show window of K. F. Salmon's shoe store on Cayuga street, a weather beaten shingle from the roof of President Cleveland's old homestead at Holland Patent. On one side is a handsomely painted cluster of roses. The relic is the property of Mrs. H.J. Perry of Holland Patent, who is visiting at Mr. Salmon's home. We are informed that a lady of that village at the recent shingling of the home stead, secured a number of the old shingles, painted and decorated them in an attractive manner and sold them for parlor ornaments, receiving quite a considerable sum out of the enterprise.

Resolved, That the Fulton & Oswego Rail Road Company be and hereby is permitted to make grade and lay the track of its Rail Road, and operate the same within the Village of Fulton, on a line substantially parallel with the track of the New York, Ontario & Western Railway and across Fourth, Third, Fay and Union-sts., to Second-st.; thence across and along said Second streets west of the track of said New York, Ontario & Western R. R. Co. across Lyon, Division, Pratt and State-sts, to Broadway, and not less than seven feet from the track of said N. Y. O. & W. R. R. Co. the conditions of said permission being

First, That said Fulton & Oswego Rail Road Company shall make and maintain all crossings at the intersection of its track with said streets and the approaches thereto, shall construct and maintain all sluices and ditches necessary for the passage of water and protection of the streets intersected as aforesaid, at the place of such intersection, and made necessary by the construction of said road, and shall at all times fully and faithfully perform all requirements of the Board of Trustees of the Village of Fulton, relating to the obligations hereinbefore set forth.

Second, That nothing in the foregoing grant of permission to said Fulton & Oswego Rail Road Company shall be deemed in any manner to interfere or affect claims for damages of any person or corporation by reason of the laying of said track as hereinbefore permitted or the operation and maintenance of said Rail Road.

Special Meeting.

FULTON, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1885

Board met pursuant to a call of the President.

Present, President Waugh, and Trustees Bradford, Chase, Gage, Hulett and Kendrick.

Messrs. Hinds, Bassett and Piper came before the Board and made statements regarding the Water Works Company:

1st.—That on account of the abundant supply of water furnished by the springs at their works it seemed unnecessary to lay a pipe to connec, he works with the river.

2d.—That on account of loaded boats being in canal where the main pipe should cross, they are prevented from laying such main at present; and asking that the Village accept the works without the laying of a pipe from their works to the river, and without the completion of the canal crossing, the village to pay only a pro rata for the hydrants supplied with water until the crossing is completed in the coming spring.

Mr. Bradford moved that the request so far as same related to the canal crossing be granted, and the motion was lost as follows:

Aye—Mr. Bradford—1.

Nays—Messrs. Chase, Gage, Hulett and Kendrick.

After some time spent in discussion of various plans to avoid the difficulties, Mr. Gage offered the following:

"WHEREAS, On the 23d day of July, 1885, the Village of Fulton entered into a contract with the Fulton Water Works Company for the rental of 32 fire hydrants when the works of said Company should be completed, which contract contained a condition that said Water Works Company should so construct such works as to be able in case of extraordinary conflagaration or great drouth, to take water from the Oswego river and,

WHEREAS, On account of ice and the necessity of removing several loaded canal boats at great risk and expense, it is now impracticable for said Water Works Company to cross the Oswego Canal from Wall-st. to the opposite bank between the flouring mills of W. G. Gage & Co. and Gilbert Bros. as contemplated by said contract; therefore

Resolved, That when said Water Works are completed in all respects according to said contract, except the laying of a pipe from the pump house of said Water Works Company to the river and the canal crossing above specified, said works be accepted and the rental of said Hydrants begin to run according to the terms of said contract; provided that said Water Works Company make a temporary crossing of said canal and amply supply the Hyrants upon the west side of said canal with water before such acceptance, and continue to keep them supplied therewith in the meantime and on or before the 10th day of May, 1886, complete said canal crossing as originally contemplated by said contract; and provided further that the pipe be laid from said pump house to the Oswego river on or before the 1st day of December. 1886, unless said Water Works Company be directed not to lay the same, by the Board of Trustees of the Village of Fulton, 30 days or upwards prior to said date."

After some further discussions and explanations of the matter, Mr. Gage's resolution was unanimously adopted.

On motion of Mr. Gage the Board adjourned.

[illegible] are all laid on this side of the river, the tank filled and all arrangements are completed. It is expected that the pipe will be laid across the river by Tuesday and the system will be tried on that side. Instead of crossing the canal at the foot of Wall street as was intended, the company have been compelled, owing to the boats in the canal, to lay their main over the First street bridge. The pipe is to be enclosed in a large box, which will be tightly packed with shavings. This method, it is expected, will prevent the water freezing in the pipe. As a further provision however, a small stream will be kept constantly running in the lower part of the village, thus keeping a circulation through the exposed pipe. In the spring the main will be laid under the canal as at first proposed. The trial of the system Tuesday, will consist of throwing four streams at the same time, through two hundred feet of hose and one inch nozzles under a pressure of 60 pounds to the square inch. According to the terms of the contract the system must be capable of doing this. The fire department have been ordered out and the tests will be made by them under the supervision of the Board of Trustees. It is expected that a number of people from neighboring cities and towns will be present to witness the workings of the system.

He Found His Watch.

On Saturday night Peter Briggs of Fulton, staggered up to the desk in the police office and complained that he had been robbed of a watch and chain and about eighteen dollars in money, while asleep in a lodging house in East Washington street. His story was so incoherent that nothing could be done by the police at the time, except to retain Mr. Briggs for intoxication, Yesterday morning he was taken in search of the lodging house, a search which would have been in vain had the woman who kept it not met them by accident, and recognizing Briggs asked the detective what was wrong. It was then explained that he had come to her house with another man, and having no money put up his watch as security for his lodging, The watch was returned,—[Standard, Monday.

Election of Officers.

Christmas Fancies.

Oh, December, hurry on,
Oh, please, oh, please come quick–
Bring snow so white,
Bring fires so bright
And bring us good St. Nick!

"Good St. Nick" is expected by these impatient boys to bring a nice warm overcoat from Kent & Miller's, 10 and 20 South Salina street.

Growler, who never minces matters, says that his kitchen now resembles a chop sea. Until Christmas day he proposes to make his head-quarters at Kent & Miller's 18 and 20 North Salina street where his friends may find him selecting the choicest suits and overcoats for all who want rare bargains.

"A green Christmas makes a fat churchyard," runs the proverb—but a white Christmas makes good sleighing—so what is the difference? Just this: The undertaker makes wooden overcoats for the former, but Kent & Miller 18 and 20 South Salina street, make the choicest and most comfortable woolen overcoats for the latter. Try them and see!

T. D. Lewis has leased his west store in his new block on Cayuga street to Preble & Cook of Utica, who will put in a stock of clothing and gent's furnishing goods about the first of March. Mr. Cook was in the employ of H. & A. Rosenbloom of this village at one time.

Miss Emma Flint entertained a large number of her friends last Thursday evening at the residence of H. C. Beals on Cayuga street. The floors of the spacious parlors had been crashed and dancing was indulged in until a late—or rather early—hour. Prof. F. K. Jones of this village, furnished the music.

An elegant gold watch and cross was presented to the Rev. Father Early of this village, last week by the French people of the parish. The event took place at the residence of Mr. Paul Roderick. The farmers in this section are being harassed by a man who claims to own the patent on the spring tooth harrow generally used around here. He demands a royalty af $10 of each owner of a harrow of this kind. It will become so by and by that it will be dangerous for a farmer to buy any kind of a farming implement.—[Baldwinsville Gazette.

The socials given by the Odd Fellows for several seasons, which have been so popular, are to be continued this winter. The series will commence soon after New Years and parties will be held every two weeks. The reputation of the Odd Fellows for giving enjoyable parties and their convenient and pleasant rooms, ought to, and no doubt will, insure a very successful series.

William C. Dixon, who for several years has held the position of boss comber in the factory, has resigned, and expects to sail for England Dec. 29th. Last Saturday afternoon he was presented by the employes in the combing room, with an elegant gold chain and seal. The presentation speech was made by A. Robertson. Thomas Dixon, who expects to sail with his brother, was presented by the night hands with a gold headed cane and an elegant scarf pin.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Evansville (Ind.) Journal, containing an account of a notable conclave of La Valette Commandery, No. 15, Knights Templar of that city. The occasion was the conferring of the order of the Red Cross upon a class of five. A number of distinguished visitors from neighboring states and cities were present. The address of welcome was made by Eminent Commander S. W. Douglas. Mr. Douglas will be remembered as a former well-known Fultonian, having been connected with H. Skinner, in the photograph business many years ago. His many friends here will be pleased to learn of his attainment to the high position in the Commandery and also to hear that in his business enterprises he has been eminently successful.

THE NEW RAILROAD.

Work Begun—The Branch to be Completed Inside of Thirty Days.

The articles of incorporation of the Fulton and Oswego Railroad Company were filed in the secretary of state's office of Albany last Thursday. The capital is $160,000. The directors for the first year are: H. Hulett, A. Rice, W. G. Gage and Willard Johnson of Fulton, J. C. Mabes, C. G. Burnham, H. E. Coe, M. B. Sloat, B. S. Hewitt, C. Parsons, jr., W. B. Half and W. F. Gownan of New York. Chas. Parsons, jr., has 186 shares; the others named and also twelve in addition, have one share each. The road is to be constructed from the northerly terminus of the Syracuse, Phœnix and Oswego railroad, and at or near that road's connection with the New York, Ontario and Western railway, and running thence through the towns of Volney and Scriba and the city of Oswego and terminating at a point on the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg in that city at or near its connection with the New York, Ontario and Western, with a branch from a point in Volney to Fulton, there connecting with the New York, Ontario and Western The length of the road is thirteen miles' and the branch two miles. Ground was broken upon the branch yesterday. A number of men were put to work and it is expected that about 200 men will be employed and the work of finishing the branch will be rapidly pushed forward. The men willl work eight hours per day. The passenger depot will be erected on the corner of Broadway and Second streets.

Hamburger vs. Riverside Mills.

In the case of David J. Hamburger vs. the Riverside and Oswego mills company of Oswego Falls, Justice Kennedy Thursday made an order vacating the injunction, because in his opinion no damage is probable to Mr. Hamburger. But, if on trial, a damage can be shown, then the defendents will be restrained. The case is about the taking of water from the Neahtahwanta, to use in the defendant's mill, which Mr. Hamburger says, injures his tannery on the banks of the outlet.

Druggist Combination Suspended

Few of our readers were aware of the fact that a combination of dealers in drugs was effected some three years ago, the principal object being to preserve high prices in drugs and medicine, and prevent cutting. This organization including nearly or quite every druggist in Oswego county except Mr. H. C. Giesler of the Opera House Drug Store of our town, who refused affiliating with the society. His refusal resulted in an attempt to boycott him by certain members of this combination, with the wholesale men of whom he purchased his stock. This effort having failed to force Mr. Giesler to raise his prices, a meeting of the society was called and convened at the St. James hall Oswego, the past week when, it was resolved to suspend the combination for the present to combine in an effort to force Mr. G. out of the business in this town. Should they succeed in accomplishing their purpose we foresee a speedy return to the old time high prices for drugs. As Mr. Giesler is credited with having broken the combination in Fulton, he should be warmly sustained and rewarded for the very valuable achievement to our people

He was driving down State street and as he reached the track saw the engine almost upon him. He drew the team to one side but the engine struck one horse, killing it almost instantly.

The show windows of the Bee Hive have attracted considerable attention for several days. The arrangement of the elegant dress goods, velvets, silk handkerchiefs, kid gloves, etc., is simply perfect and well calculated to show the beautiful goods to advantage. The contents of the window gives but a faint idea of the enormous and elegant stock carried by the Bee Hive,

The entertainment given by the Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. church last Friday and Saturday in Woodin's hall was largely attended and was a pronounced success. A New England supper was served Friday evening. A large number of useful and fancy articles which had been made by the ladies were placed for sale. Nearly all of them were sold. The proceeds realized by the society were about $125.00.

Would it not be well for the proper authorities to enforce the village ordinance in regard to coasting on the streets? This practice has been indulged in during the week to quite an extent and at a time of day when our streets are filled with people and vehicles. The irrepressible youths and their sleds will cause mischief sooner or later. We speak of this in behalf of the traveling public.

Last Thursday afternoon as two "Soaping" agents were driving down First street, their horse became unmanageable and broke into a run. In front of Summerville's livery the Water Works company had torn up the road, leaving a pile of dirt, and only a small passage way at the side. Almost in this passage stood a lumber wagon. As the runaway reached this point, the horse was pulled out to one side to avoid the wagon and the wheel ran over the pile of dirt, throwing the occupants out. One of them by the name of Dart, was thrown against the wheel of the lumber wagon striking on his head. He was taken to Dr. Hall's office, and subsequently to the Johnson house. The injuries were not as serious as at first supposed and he was able to leave town Saturday.

[illegible] when about [illegible] years of age, and went to Ogdensburg, N. Y., by way of the Oswego canal, passing through Fulton and [illegible]. For a few years he [illegible] schools. He then prepared himself for and entered Union College at Schenectady, N. Y., with only his splendid abilities as capital to carry him through. After a regular four year's course, during the presidency of the famous Dr. Nott, he graduated at Union with honor, being one of a few who received a Phi Beta Kappa Key—a distinction of high scholarship. By reason of his great industry and determination to succeed he accomplished what few have done. He entered college with very little money and when he graduated had saved nearly five hundred dollars. It was during his college course that a strong friendship arose between him and Dr. Tully of Oswego, who was a student at Union at the same time—a friendship that has continued without interruption. From college he went to a theological seminary and was ordained as a minister of the gospel of the Presbyterian church. He then commenced preaching, but was obliged to give it up owing to lung difficulty. It was after this that he first entered a boarding school as principal at Princeton, N. Y. From there he moved to Ballston Spa, where he conducted a large and important boarding school. Twice his schools were burned to the ground by the carelessness of students. From Ballston he removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., and became engaged at that place in the lumber business. The next change was to come to Fulton some fifteen years ago and become the head of Falley Seminary. He remained principal of this institution until the insiduous disease from which he suffered compelled him to cease his labors—two years ago. Then the school was closed.

Mr. Gilmour was a man of high attainments and a fine linguist. It was in France and Italy that he learned the French and Italian languages; besides these he was thoroughly conversant with the German and Spanish, and during his several trips abroad made it his business to study the people, their institutions, the customs and languages of these countries. His life has been one of great influence and one devoted to doing good. His character, firmness itself;—for fifteen years he saw his life blood ebbing away, yet the mind never lost its vigor or faltered. The man was the same in all his varied positions, from the cradle to the grave. A life of large experience, broad culture, liberal views, one that loved to see the whole human family grow better and joined in the work, has closed.

Mr. Gilmour leaves surviving him a wife, four children and three brothers, Allan Gilmour of Albany, Hon. Neil Gilmour, ex-Supt. of public instruction and a younger brother in Scotland. Funeral services were held at his late residence at four o'clock last Monday afternoon, Rev. Chas. Smith and Dr. Tully of Oswego, officiating. The remains accompanied by the friends, were taken to the family burying ground at Schenectady, N. Y., Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Mary A. Maynard, wife of A. B. Maynard of this village, died at her home on Third street last Saturday aged 76 years. Her health has been rather poor for the past year and for some months she has been confined to the house. Funeral services were held yesterday morning at 11 o'clock from the house, Rev. Mr. Smith of the Presbyterian church officiating. The remains were buried at Jacksonville, N. Y.

Mrs. J. P. Streeter of this village, died last Thursday morning about five o'clock, at her home on Utica street. For the past year her health has been very poor, and for several months she has been a great sufferer. Funeral services were held Saturday, from the Baptist church, Rev. L. Golden, her former pastor officiating, assisted by Rev. Mr. Breaker.

Francis Gorman died at his home in Oswego Falls last Friday evening, aged 67 years. Funeral services were held Sunday afternoon at 2 p. m., from the Catholic church, Rev. Father Kearney officiating. The remains were interred in St. Mary's cemetery in this village.

Some thrifty farmers place their hoe and steel tools in air-slaked lime during the winter to keep them bright.

Harness should never be kept in stables where manure is constantly generating large quantities of ammonia. Ammonia rots the leather.

Fowls should always have some hard coal screenings placed within their reach. Feed occasionly a few oats. Always keep some old iron in the drinking water. Place plenty of straw for them to scratch among for exercise.

Take two pounds of alum and dissolve in three quarts of boiling water; let it stand on the fire until all traces of the alum disappear, then apply it with a brush to every chink and crevice where the ants come in. They dislike this as much as cockroaches do.

In the Island of Jersey cows are milked in tall buckets, with a strainer of fine cloth over the top, which prevents impurities from going through. It is by attention to such methods of cleanliness as well as by the excellence of their cows, that Jersey dairymen have achived their reputation of good buttermakers.

In fattening fowls or chicks keep them in a darkened place and feed them cooked food (lighting up the room when you do so) and sour milk liberally in the place of water. In about ten days you can make your birds nice and plump by such a system of feeding. Feed at first twice daily, and soon after three times a day, all they will eat up clean with an apparent relish.

Dr. Cagney calls attention to the indiscriminate use of the tincture of arnica for horses. He says that it is often employed in considerable quantities for petty strains and bruises, and is kept in contact with the affected surfaces until they are swollen, heated and often blistered, thus greatly aggravating the original trouble. He also cites instances in which erysipelas has been induced in men from an over-use of this irritating remedy.

Potato Rot Preventive.

In view of the fact that hundreds and thousands of bushels of potatoes are daily lost by rot in this district, the experience of a successful farmer of Monroe county is gladly published. The farmer mentioned carefully sorted over two heaps of potatoes, taking great care that every tuber in each pile should be perfectly sound. He then sprinkled a bushel of airslacked lime over one heap and buried them, at the same time burying the other, but without putting on the lime. Four days later he uncovered both heaps and found that the potatoes in the one which he had sprinkled the lime were perfectly sound, while those in the other were all spoiled. As an example of the rapidity with which this rot effects the tuber, the following is cited: A gentleman living on the line of the Rochester & Pittsburg railroad loaded a car on Monday evening with carefully picked over potatoes and on Tuesday morning was forced to throw away seven bushels on account of the rot which had effected them during the night. Another farmer shipped a carload to Pittsburg, which on their arrival there were worthless, not a single bushel of the carload being saved.—[Rochester Union.

Never neglect a constipated condition of the bowels, or serious results may follow, such as piles, impure blood, and many chronic complaints. Burdock Blood Bitters.

A Sunday school teacher was telling her children how the devil goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, and after the lesson was through she said those who wished could ask questions. At once a little boy spoke up and asked how fast the devil could run. "Hush, Johnnie," said the teacher; such questions are very profane. "Well I don't care," said Johnnie, "he can't outrun pa, anyhow, 'cause I heard pa tell a man down the street the other day that he caught the devil the night he came home from the lodge."

LOW PRICES FOR BUTTER,

The New York Tribune in its market report, explained why some butter is sold for such low prices in speaking of butter it said: "Light colored goods are very hard to dispose of and several lots were thought well sold at 8 to 10 cents. If butter makers would get the top price, they should use the Improved Butter Color, made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. It gives a pure dandelion color and never turns red, or rancid, but tends to improve and preserve the butter.

Mr. Featherly (making an evening call)—"Bobby, won't you come and sit on my knee?" Bobby (accepting the proffered seat)—"All right, Mr. Featherly. Pa told me to-day that you ought to be sat down on once in a while."—[N. Y. Sun.

Frank Hatton, in the Chicago Mail, pays this generous and unstinted tribute to the dead Hendricks: "Hendricks had the finest face of any public men I ever saw. It was classic in its shape, and there was about his eyes and the gray of his hair and the paleness of his complexion something that spiritualised it all. In the outline there was the strength of a strong man, in the expression the sweetness of a woman. His was the most lovable face I ever saw or ever expect to see."

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight exercise; and always avoid standing on ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.

Iron is a valuable blood tonic but much abused. It should be taken in small doses and there is no better form for it than muriated tincture, in doses of ten drops, not more, three times a day, in a little water after meals.

Thousands who cannot take cod-liver oil without causing dyspepsia and loathing of food may take extract of malt as a tonic. The dose is from a dessert spoonful to a table spoonful three times a day. It may be mixed with water.

Many persons seriously damage their eyes by seriously rubbing them when drowsy, especially when awakened in the morning. To strengthen the eyes is to relieve them when swollen or congested, and to remove chronic inflammation in the eyes, purient discharges, etc., nothing is equal to bathing them frequently with water, at first tepid, but afterwards lowering in temperature to absolute coldness.

Where's the sense in spending money for a doubtful affair, when a sure and reliable thing is offered? Hop Porons Plasters for all aches, pains and soreness. The greatest strengthener known. 25c.

Religious.

Be true to yourself, yes; but to what self? There is something before being true to yourself, and that is, "Take heed to yourself," Look well what that is to which you propose to be true When self will stand the touchstone of the God of truth, then be true to it, faithful even unto death; and, "it will follow, as the night the day, thou canst not be false to any man." The gospel as I have already said, is concerned first and chiefly with the development of this new self in man; making him a new creature in Christ Jesus; creating in him a clean heart, and renewing a right spirit within him. It nowhere gives us as our principle of life to be true to our native instincts and moral characteristics; on the contrary, a great part of our moral discipline is directed at subduing these. Christian training has not only to bring us to a certain point of attainment, it has also to detach us from very much; and it is to the work of detachment as well as that of attainment that our taking heed to ourselves is directed.—[The Pulpit Treasury.

THE PROPER THING.

White embroidered collars are becoming fashionable.

Gloves are not so long, and are less wrinkled than formerly.

Robes for the inside of a lady's carriage are of dark-colored furs.

The use of furs as trimmings and wraps was never so general as at present.

Gauze fans, white, red and black, with painted decorations are in great favor.

Muffs are of all and every kind of stuff, the most elegant correspond with the toilet.

A novelty is the ladies' silk opera hat, with springs to flatten it like a man's crush hat.

Collarettes and small muffs for children are made of chinchilla, natural beaver, and gray crimmer.

Guimps of crepe lisse or crinkled crape, are worn of a color to harmonize with the toilet.

A gray cloth dress may be slightly trimmed with orange velvet or plush with excellent effect.

Louis XV costumes with large sashes coquettishly tied and pretty hoods are much worn by little children.

Black slippers and black stockings are still used with dresses of any color, but not to the exclusion of white ones.

Walking shoes are much more sensible in every respect than formerly, low flat heels, broad soles and roomy uppers having superseded the contracted. elevated heels and pinched toes of a few years ago.

A new sleeve for an evening dress is short to the elbow and open to the shoulder on the outside of the arm. It is united by straps of velvet, if the corsage is of that material, or it is tied with a series of narrow ribbons in tiny bows.

WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?

Among the many symptoms of Dyspepsia or indigestion the most prominent are: Variable appetite; faint, gnawing feeling at pit of the stomach, with unsatisfied craving for food; heartburn, feeling of weight and wind in the stomach, bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, low spirits, general prostration, headache, and constipation. There is no form of disease more prevalent than Dyspepsia, and none so peculiar to the high-living and rapid-eating American people. Alcohol and tobacco produce Dyspepsia; also, bad air, rapid eating, etc. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS will cure the worst case, by regulating the bowels and toning up the digestive organs. Sold everywhere.

Well, maybe you can, but I doubt it.

When a tempting [illegible] is in reach of your arm
With a wonderful [illegible] about it,
Do you argue the point 'twixt the good and the harm?
Well, maybe you do, but I doubt it.

And if by these tricks you should capture a heart
With a womanly sweetness about it,
Will you guard it and keep it and act the good part?
Well, maybe you will, but I doubt it.

Enormous metal buttons are not considered to be in good taste, but they are fashionable just the same.

Keep it dark! as a Burlington girl remarked when her lover turned down the gas and kissed her.—[Burlington Free Press.

It is thought that a good square kiss right on the mouth would smack some of the nonsense out of Mary Anderson, if it got in its work before it was frozen.

"May I help you to alight?" asked Jimson politely as Miss LeJones drove up in her carriage. "Thank you. I never smoke," she returned coldly.—[Chicago Rambler

"Has George yet hinted that he is fond of you?" asked the girl's mother. "No," she replied thoughtfully, "and I doubt if he ever will. He complained last night that his corns pained him, and it wasn't 10 o'clock."—[New York Sun.

Is Everybody Drunk?

Among the many stories Lincoln used to relate was the following: Trudging along a lonely road one morning on my way to the county seat, Judge——overtook me with his wagon and invited me to a seat.

We had not gone far before the wagon began to wobble. Said I, "Judge, I think your coachman has taken a drop too much."

Putting his head out of the window, the Judge shouted: "Why, you infernal scoundrel. you are drunk!"

Turning round with great gravity, the coachman said: "Be dad! but that's the firs' rightful d'cision your Honor's giv'n 'n twel' mont!"

If people knew the facts they would be surprised to learn how many people reel in the streets who never drink a drop. They are the victims of sleeplessness, of drowsy days, of apoplectic tendencies, whose blood is set on fire by uric acid. Some day they will reel no more—they will drop dead, just because they havn't the moral courage to defy useless professional attendance, and by use of the wonderful Warner's safe cure nutralize the uric acid in the system and thus get rid of the "drunkenness in the blood."—The American Rural Home.

EXPERIENCE TAUGHT ME!

And my money paid for it. After having Liver Complaint four years, and spending money on nostrums and doctors who didn't help me, I tried Sulphur Bitters. Six bottles cured me. I shall always use them.—[G. N. Butler, Cohoes, N. Y.

A Prudent Merchant.

A New York Merchant advertised for a cashier. A well dressed gentleman applied for the situation. The merchant looked over his references and said:

"Your credentials are excellent, but I would like to ask you a question."

"Certainly, sir."

"Have you been vaccinnated?"

"Yes, sir."

"That will do. We have no use for your services. The only cashier who can be relied on to any extent whatever is the one who is afraid of the Canadian small-pox."—[Texas Siftings.

WHAT PARENTS FEAR.

Many persons—especially parents—object to many quack nostrums as likely to engender or encourage a love for strong drink. They are right. Better die of disease than of drunkenness. The use of Parker's tonic does not involv this danger. It not only builds up the system, curing all ailments of the stomach, liver and kidneys, but it stimulates without intoxicating and absolutely cures the appetite for liquor. 29m1

"Remember those chickens you sold me Saturday?" "Certainly." "Spring chickens, wern't they?" "Of course. What was the matter with them?" "Oh, nothing. The springs were all there; only I wanted to tell you that the next time I want a pair with rubber springs. Wire springs are too rich for my blood."—[Phila. Call.

AFTER DIPHTHERIA.

Diphtheria is a terrible disease, requiring the greatest medical skill to effect a cure. Even when its power is broken, it clings to the patient with great persistency, and often leaves the system poisoned and prostrated. Just here Hood's Sarsaparilla does a vast amount of good, expelling impurities from the blood, giving it richness and vitality, while it renovates and strengthens the system.

Do not let the stranger
[illegible] you may impart?

If you hear a prayer that moves you
By its humble, pleading tone,
Join it. Do not let the seeker
Bow before his God alone.
Why should not your brother share
The strength of "two or three" in prayer?

If you see the hot tears falling
From a sorrowful brother's eyes,
Share them. And by sharing,
Own your kinship with the skies.
Why should anyone be glad
When a brother's heart is sad?

If a silvery laugh is rippling
Through the sunshine on his face,
Share it. 'Tis the wise man's saying—
For both grief and joy a place.
There's health and goodness in the mirth
In which an honest laugh has birth.

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly helping hand,
Say so. Speak out brave and truly,
Ere the darkness veil the land.
Should a brother workman dear,
Falter for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go:
Leave them. Trust the Harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow.
So until its happy end,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

THE FORGED CHECK.

I hated him from the first to the last; I hated him with an intensity that has only lately died.

Perhaps he was to blame, though, after all, perhaps not.

I am an old man now, and much of the past is faded into oblivion; but that portion of my life which relates to him is as fresh in my mind to-night as it was fifty years ago, when we were clerks together—Ted March and I—in the great shipping house of Halliton & War.

Ted was very handsome, and I hated him for that, for I was very plain and insignificant in appearance, and the comparison drawn by every stranger who entered the counting house made me ill-natured and cross-grained.

Before Ted ever really did me wrong I hated him, hated him instinctively. [illegible] hated him against my better inclinations, as if already within me there was something conscious of the part he was to play in my life's dream.

I can close my eyes now and live over again those dim old days.

I saw Ted perched on a high stool at the battered and ink-besmeared old desk, with the spring sunshine streaming in through the dingy windows and glinting in his light hair, as he sat with his blue eyes fastened vacantly on the masts and rigging of the vessels anchored along the wharf, with one girlish hand twisted among his glistening curls, and the other toying idly with the pen on the desk.

Yes, I hated him; hated him for his elegant manners and complaisant ways.

I hated him for his merry laugh, his melodious voice, hated him for his fine, slender figure, his graceful walk; but I hated him, yes, I hated him more than all for his great influence over Mary Halliton.

Mary was the only child of the head of our firm, and a girl whom I had learned to love with all the strength of my mind, my heart, my soul, and yet I had never told her, and she loved me too.

I know she did, before Ted March showed his handsome face in Marley.

Mary was not beautiful.

I was conscious of that.

Many scarcely thought her a pretty miss, but to me, from the first to the last, she was the fairest, sweetest and most lovely of women.

Ted fell in love with Mary and Mary fell in love with Ted before they had been acquainted through a single spring day.

After four o'clock every evening he would stroll across the street to Mr. Halliton's and chat with and make love to the girl my heart was breaking for.

How I hated him as he hung at the gate wishing her good-night.

I thought that I could see the little white hand tremble as it waved an adieu [illegible] as he strode away into the thickening twilight.

Should I dog his steps, and when he [illegible] to a lonely place, dart suddenly upon him and do him deadly harm?

Heaven knows how often I asked myself that question.

For months I watched him, and oh, the bitter, bitter pain, the anguish and [illegible] I suffered, human tongue can [illegible]

[illegible] the spy on March's every [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] He was made [illegible] a [illegible] signature.

What a hideous, fiendish joy shot into my heart as I comprehended what this meant.

For the past few nights March had lost heavily at the [illegible] establishment—lost more than he received for a year's salary, and a blockhead would have seen why he was practicing the signature of Halliton & War.

The very next afternoon I saw him draw up a check, for what amount I could not see, but I did see that it was a check on the bank where the firm dealt.

As he left the office I followed, well behind, but not out of sight, down to where the firm banked.

In a short time he came forth again, and, after glancing furtively about, he pulled his hat over his eyes and disappeared around the first corner.

Entering the bank, I accosted the cashier.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Willis."

"Mr. Rolls.

"One of our clerks presented a check here a few moments ago?"

"Yes, sir."

"May I look at it, please?"

"Certainly; here it is, sir.

"Ah, just as I thought. There, Mr. Wills, look at the curl of the stem of this 'H' and the way the 't' is crossed, and the general flowing hand. Does it strike you as old Haliton's peculiar chirography? Very like it, a first-rate imitation, but not quite the thing."

"What, forgery? March—impossible! And for five thousand dollars?"

"That is just what it is, Mr. Wills, and as you have always been a warm friend of March's. will you help me save him?"

"Save him—how can we do it?"

"Cancel the check and replace the money."

"But who will furnish the money? I cannot afford——"

"Ah, don't trouble yourself on that score; I believe my balance is five thousand; turn that over: I am young and strong, and I love poor Ted."

"But——"

"Oh! don't let us talk of it, Mr. Wills—think of your own son, he's about Ted's age, and give me the slip of paper and cancel the check."

"Rolls," said he catching my trembling hand and shaking it heartily, 'you are a noble fellow; there is not another man who would have done what you have done—a friend in need is a friend indeed."

I laughed aloud as I received the forged check in exchange for my own, although it robbed me of the accumulation of years—made me a very pauper.

But what cared I?

Had I not lost all that made life dear? What were five thousand dollars compared with my revenge?

Years rolled away, and March, for I watched him night after night, never again visited the gambling house after the day of the forgery.

He had squared all his debts, undoubtedly, and started anew in life, with good resolutions and noble aspirations, secure in the secrecy of his crime.

"March has settled down at last," said one of the junior clerks to me one day, "and old Hal says he's the best business man. Just look at the business they trust to him, Rolls."

I said nothing, but I thought, Oh, Heaven! I thought with demoniacal joy how swiftly my time was coming on.

Rapidly was my enemy climbing the ladder of fame.

Let him, let him—let him mount it—up, up, up, until he reaches the highest round, and then—and then——

The crisis came at last.

March was made third partner in the great shipping house, and shortly after, his wedding day was fixed.

He had mounted the highest round of the ladder.

Wealthy, beloved, honored, about to wed the fairest of God's creatures, so thought I, and I worshiped her, too.

What more could fortune bestow upon him?

For what should I wait?

The wedding day dawned.

All the clerks were invited to be present at the nuptials, and each of us had agreed to give Ted some gift as a token of the esteem and love we felt for our old coadjutor of the counting house.

"Wait and see," I laughingly replied, as I pictured to myself the scene that would ensue when, after the ceremony I handed March the forged check.

But hold! A wheel comes off! the steamer is overturned, and the brave firemen are picked up bleeding and senseless!

An investigation revealed the fact that in oiling the steamer that morning the steward had neglected to put in the linch-pin. A little neglect on his part had caused a loss of a half million dollars. The busy marts of trade are full of men who are making the same fatal mistake. They neglect their kidneys, thinking they need no attention, whereas if they made occasional use of Warner's safe cure they would never say that they don't feel quite well; that a tired feeling bothers them; that they are plaugeed with indigestion; that their brain refuses to respond at call; that their nerves are all unstrung.—[Fire Journal.

Harper for 1886.

With a happy New Year to the readers of Harpers magazine, The Easy Chair opens the door of a new apartment and in its most irresistable manner introduces the editor's study and its host. It is a cosy corner and the genius loci, who so warmly welcomes his guests is no tunfamiliar. It is the face of an old friend and the study at once seems homelike. We listen intently while he overhauls the character of this department of the monthly and chats in his easy captivating way about books and people. To go once is to go again, and we thank the Easy Chair for this New Year greeting.

The Atlantic.

The Atlantic Monthly for 1886 will strive earnestly to meet the tastes of the most thoughtful and intelligent class, and to present articles by the leading writers on the living questions of the day. H. C. He also says that he will warrant this as being the best blood medicine that can be bought. It is always certain to cure Syphilis in its worst form. It is positively guaranteed. 27eow

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

This is a wish The Times extends to all its readers. For ere another issue reaches you we will all have launched out into the new year of 1886.

The year which is fast drawing to a close has been in many ways a remarkable one. To the average business man the year has had its many perplexeties and draw backs. The cry of "hard times" is unpleasantly familiar to the ears of many of us. Still with all our business and financial troubles we should feel duly thankful to the Almighty for his merciful kindness. For while other countries about us have been harassed by pestilence and wars, we as a people have lived quietly, happily, and prosperously. The hand of death has removed from our land many of its conspicuous public characters during the year, whose names will ever be familiar in the annals of American history.

With the hope that the year of '86 may be one of unbounded prosperity to the people and the country, we again wish you all a happy new year.

A CHANGE OF PROPRIETORSHIP.

The editor and one of the proprietors of this paper, John A. McKay, has sold his interest to his partner in the business F. D. VanWagenen. During Mr. McKay's connection with the paper he has served the public faithfully and has gained an enviable reputation with business men. We are sure that his many friends will join us in wishing him success in his new enterprises. The policy of the paper will remain unchanged and in future will be under the management of J. R. Fairgrieve of Schaghticoke, N. Y.

Erwin appears to have the lead in the speakership contest.

The presidential succession bill has passed the Senate and is now before the House.

Lieut-Governor Jones has appointed C. F. S. Coe, editor of the Bath Star, as his Private Secretary.

The Republicans in Congress are very anxious to make Dakotá a state. This is not surprising when we take into consideration the fact that this would add three electorial votes to the Republican side in the next Presidential contest.

For the first time since the small-pox became epidemic in Montreal, no new cases of the disease were reported Christmas eve. The value of vaccination as a prophylactic is shown by the remarkable fact that, although there have been over 800 persons employed by the health department as sanitary police, isolation police, hospital nurses, and in other capacities during the epidemic, not one of them contracted the disease. As a matter of course they were all vaccinated.

William C. Pierrepont, who died at Pierrepont Manor the other day, superintended the construction of his own coffin, which was made years ago of cherry from a tree that grew in the dooryard of his house. He exhibited it to a visitor and also showed him the grave which he had dug in the churchyard opposite his house, and the Potsdam sandstone slab which stood at his head. He left orders that his remains should be laid in the grave with the head to the north.

A serious railroad accident occurred last Sunday morning sixteen miles out of New York on the New York and New Haven road. A train consisting of five cars, two of which were sleepers, plunged down an embankment of fifty feet. Fireman Eugene Blake, aged 35 years was crushed under the engine. The Pelhamville depot platform which extended about sixty feet west of the depot was raised from its foundation by a gale of wind and flung across the track, thus causing the fatal plunge of the advancing train. The damages to rolling stock are heavy.

Is Cleveland in Danger?

Pittsburg, Dec. 28.—The Penny Press to-day published a story to the effect that five Pinkerton detectives passed thro' here last night from Chicago, on their way to Washington, for the purpose of looking after the personal safety of President Cleveland. One of the party, named McGuire, stated that they had been ordered to Washington by way of Philadelphia, where they were to be joined by five men from the branch agency there, all them to proceed to Washington for special duty at the white house. On [illegible]

Mrs. Shannon of Oswego who has been in the insane asylum at [illegible] for some time [illegible] and took rooms for the night with a view of taking her home if she continued so well. The next morning about 4 o'clock Mrs. Shannon got up and dressed herself and started a fire in the stove. Her husband pretending to be asleep, kept a close watch of her. He noticed she had a knife in her hand. Suddenly she seized the stove poker and struck him a severe blow on the head, laying open the scalp. Fortunately the blow did not stun him, and he was able to grapple with her. After a time he persuaded her to let him dress himself by promising to take her home. Calling help to his aid, he got her back to the asylum, where she will remain for a while.

Failure in Syracuse.

The general assignment of Marchant Brothers, furniture manufacturers at Nos. 3 to 7 Gifford street, was filed in the County Clerk's office late on Saturday afternoon. Clarence G. Brown is the assignee. The notes made or endorsed by the assignors, re-discounted Dow, Short & Company, and transferred to Eastern banks, who are preferred for the various amounts. The total liabilities are estimated at $10,000, and the actual assets at half that amount. The failure was caused by the suspension of Dow, Short & Company.—[Syracuse Herald.

The failure of the above firm will in no wise affect C. C. Marchant, furniture dealer of this village.

The distressing disease, Salt Rheum, is readily cured by Hood's Sarsaprilla, the great blood purifier. Sold by all druggists.

Personal and Political.

James G. Blaine, jr., is studying hard at Augusta, Me., to prepare himself for entrance at Harvard College next fall, at which time he will be 18 years old.

President Cleveland will begin his New Year's Day reception at 10 a. m., which was the hour under Buchanan's administration, and it was Mrs. Lincoln who set the time an hour later for the convenience of late breakfasting diplomats and officials.

The first commission signed by President Cleveland after his Cabnet commissions, was that of General Grant as general of the army on the retired list. The first act of Congress signed by President Cleveland was the bill giving Mrs. Grant an anuity of $5,000.

S. N. D. North, president of the State Associated Press and managing editor of the Utica Herald, is about to become the editor and one of the proprietors of the Albany Morning Express. Mr. North takes leave of the Herald this week and assumes the management of the Express on Monday next.

William H. Vanderbilt's will was admitted to probate yesterday. The Probate clerk proceeded to the Vanderbilt mansion, where the widow of the testator and the four sons qualified as executrix and executors, declaring that they would faithfully discharge the duties. Letters testamentary were thereupon issued to them.

GENERAL NEWS.

The secretary of war has ordered a considerable number of troops to the south-west on account of Indian troubles.

The bank of England has raised its rate to four per cent. This is indicative of a revival of business.

Dr. Mary Walker, wearing her Grand Army badge, and claiming the rights and privileges which are accorded to an old soldier, called upon Commissioner Black at the Pension Officer to-day to see that official about some matter or other in which she was interested, but he refused to listen to her on the plea that he was too busy. She persisted, however, and Commissioner, to get rid of her, sent for the Superintendent of the building and had her put out. She protested against being treated so ungenerously, but it did no good; her strength was not equal to the Superintendent—["Carp's" Washington Letter to the Cleveland Leader.

The Century.

With the New Year comes The Century magazine filled with the most appitizing stories and beside a great fund of interesting literature. It is not too much to say that The Century now holds the first place of all our serial publications. Its illustrations are among the finest that can be produced. The wonderful series of war papers have given the magazine a large circulation in both hemispheres. In the present number "The Second Battle of Bull Run" is most graphically described, and is shown to have been one of the most remarkable events of the war. The table of contents is full and inviting.

Another Hydrophobia Cure.

A dispatch from Milwaukee on Monday states that Joseph Krebls, an employe of the [illegible], was bitten in the calf of the right leg by a dog, twenty-five days ago, but did not experience any trouble until last Friday when the premonitory symptoms of hydrophobia seized him. He complained of a severe pricking sensation at the wound and at points along his right side to the crown of his head, was unable to swallow and could not sleep. He was taken to a bath house, the theory having recently been advanced here that a treatment of Turkish baths would cure the disease, if commenced in time. Saturday Krebls passed five hours in the sweat room with the temperature at 186 degrees and Sunday passed two hours there. Saturday night he obtained six hours of undisturbed sleep and rest and Sunday again slept soundly. The dangerous symptoms have disappeared.

Glass Worker's in Trouble.

A Cleveland, Oswego county dispatch says: There is difficulty between the glass workmen and the manufacturers again on the wages question, which may result in a strike on December 28. In settling the wages last fall for this season's blast, the workmen signed articles based on a price list called the "Pittsburg list," which they claim was understood to be the list as changed by mutual agreement last season; whereas the manufacturers hold that the Pittsburg list was to be the list now in use in Pittsburg. The workmen asked the manufacturers to meet them in committee to settle the difference. This the latter failed to do, claiming wages were settled for the season at their former meeting. The workmen have notified the manufacturers that unless the matter is settled on or before Monday next, they will not work any more until it is. The strike, if one is ordered, will include all factories in this state. W.

Change of Firm.

Take notice that the firm of John A. McKay & Co., publishers of "The Fulton Times" at Fulton, N. Y., is this day dissolved by mutual consent. John A. McKay retiring from the firm and F. D. VanWagenen continuing the business.

[illegible]

[illegible] the following resolution: [illegible] of Oswego and State of New York [illegible] and that for these purposes we adopt the following:

CODE OF ETHICS.

PREAMBLE.

The members of the Oswego County Pharmaceutical Association, considering it necessary that some mutual understanding shall exist in regard to the moral principles guiding them in their profession, hereby agree upon the following Code of Ethics:

1st. We accept the United States Pharmacopoeia as our standard and guide for all official preparations, and recognize a variance from its rules only in exceptional cases—where sufficient authority has proved some other process more reliable to attain the same end.

This section is not intended to interfere with the dispensing of prescriptions or medicines ordered in accordance with foreign pharmacopoeias.

2d. Although not a legitimate part of our business, custom and the necessities of the times warrant us in keeping proprietary medicines, yet we earnestly recommend pharmacists, when called upon for an opinion of their merits, to discourage their use.

3d. We discountenance all secret formulæ between physicians and pharmacists, and consider it our duty to communicate such to each othe when requested.

4th. We distinctly repudiate the practice of allowing physicians a percentage on their prescriptions as derogatory to both professions.

5th. We will endeavor, so far as lies in our power, to refrain from compromising the professional reputation of physicians, and we expect the same comity from them.

6th. Since the the professional training of the pharmacist does not include those branches which enable the physician to diagnose and treat disease, we should, in all practicable cases, decline to give medical advice, and refer the applicant to a regular physican.

7th. The growing demands of the age require that those who follow the profession of pharmacy should be educated up to a higher standard. Therefore we consider it our duty, individually and collectively, to encourage the advancement of knowledge in our profession generally, and particularly by stimulating our assistants to attend the lectures of some pharmaceutical college, and by aiding and assisting them to do so.

The object of the association is clearly set forth in the above. There is nothing in their constitution, by-laws or code of ethics that fixes prices on drugs and the idea of preventing any man buying goods when the whole world is the market is simply absurd. It is only when a man's financial ability is in question that the wholesale trade refuse to sell him, and a wholsale personal attack on the entire profession of the county seems unjust in the extreme.

We expect that just and wholesome laws will always bear heavily on the transgressor, but the time is not far distant when by the united efforts of Pharmaceutical associations, the bar will be banished from every drug store and the druggist will be required by law to put forth every effort for the advancement of chemical and pharmaceutical knowledge, and the people will demand standard, officinal medicines.

Then the war will cease and patent medicines if sold at all, will be sold by tradesmen, where no more skill is required than to sell a jumping jack or a tin whistle. Respectfully yours,

R. E. Phillips.

JAS. R. FAIRGRIEVE - EDITOR

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

This is a wish The Times extends to all its readers. For ere another issue reaches you we will all have launched out into the new year of 1886.

The year which is fast drawing to a close has been in many ways a remarkable one. To the average business man the year has had its many perplexeties and draw backs. The cry of "hard times" is unpleasantly familiar to the ears of many of us. Still with all our business and financial troubles we should feel duly thankful to the Almighty for his merciful kindness. For while other countries about us have been harassed by pestilence and wars, we as a people have lived quietly, happily, and prosperously. The hand of death has removed from our land many of its conspicious public characters during the year, whose names will ever be familiar in the annals of American history.

With the hope that the year of '86 may be one of unbounded prosperity to the people and the country, we again wish you all a happy new year.

A CHANGE OF PROPRIETORSHIP.

The editor and one of the proprietors of this paper, John A. McKay, has sold his interest to his partner in the business F. D. VanWagenen. During Mr. McKay's connection with the paper he has served the public faithfully and has gained an enviable reputation with business men. We are sure that his many friends will join us in wishing him success in his new enterprises. The policy of the paper will remain unchanged and in future will be under the management of J. R. Fairgrieve of Schaghticoke, N. Y.

Erwin appears to have the lead in the speakership contest.

The presidential succession bill has passed the Senate and is now before the House.

Lieut-Governor Jones has appointed C. F. S. Coe, editor of the Bath Star, as his Private Secretary.

The Republicans in Congress are very anxious to make Dakota a state. This is not surprising when we take into consideration the fact that this would add three electorial votes to the Republican side in the next Presidential contest.

For the first time since the small-pox became epidemic in Montreal, no new cases of the disease were reported Christmas eve. The value of vaccination as a prophylactic is shown by the remarkable fact that, although there have been over 300 persons employed by the health department as sanitary police, isolation police, hospital nurses, and in other capacities during the epidemic, not one of them contracted the disease. As a matter of course they were all vaccinated.

William C. Pierrepont, who died at Pierrepont Manor the other day, superintended the construction of his own coffin, which was made years ago of cherry from a tree that grew in the dooryard of his house. He exhibited it to a visitor and also showed him the grave which he had dug in the churchyard opposite his house, and the Potsdam sandstone slab which stood at his head. He left orders that his remains should be laid in the grave with the head to the north.

A serious railroad accident occurred last Sunday morning sixteen miles out of New York on the New York and New Haven road. A train consisting of five cars, two of which were sleepers, plunged down an embankment of fifty feet. Fireman Eugene Blake, aged 35 years was crushed under the engine. The Pelhamville depot platform which extended about sixty feet west of the depot was raised from its foundation by a gale of wind and flung across the track, thus causing the fatal plunge of the advancing train. The damages to rolling stock are heavy.

Is Cleveland in Danger?

Pittsburg, Dec. 26.—The Penny Press to-day published a story to the effect that five Pinkerton detectives passed thro' here last night from Chicago, on their way to Washington, for the purpose of looking after the personal safety of President Cleveland. One of the party, named McGuire, stated that they had been ordered to Washington by way of Philadelphia, where they were to be joined by five men from the branch agency there, all then to proceed to Washington for special duty at the white house. On their arrival at the capital they were to receive full instructions as to their [illegible]

The next morning about 4 o'clock Mrs. Shannon got up and dressed herself and started a fire in the stove. Her husband pretending to be asleep, kept a close watch of her. He noticed she had a knife in her hand. Suddenly she seized the stove poker and struck him a severe blow on the head, laying open the scalp. Fortunately the blow did not stun him, and he was able to grapple with her. After a time he persuaded her to let him dress himself by promising to take her home. Calling help to his aid, he got her back to the asylum, where she will remain for a while.

Failure in Syracuse.

The general assignment of Marchant Brothers, furniture manufacturers at Nos. 3 to 7 Gifford street, was filed in the County Clerk's office late on Saturday afternoon. Clarence G. Brown is the assignee. The notes made or endirsed by the assignors, re-discounted Dow, Short & Company, and transferred to Eastern banks, who are preferred for the various amounts. The total liabilities are estimated at $10,000, and the actual assets at half that amount. The failure was caused by the suspension of Dow, Short & Company.—[Syracuse Herald.

She persisted, however, and Commissioner, to get rid of her, sent for the Superintendent of the building and had her put out. She protested against being treated so ungenerously, but it did no good; her strength was not equal to the Superintendent—["Carp's" Washington Letter to the Cleveland Leader.

The Century.

With the New Year comes The Century magazine filled with the most appitizing stories and beside a great fund of interesting literature. It is not too much to say that The Century now holds the first place of all our serial publications. Its illustrations are among the finest that can be produced. The wonderful series of war papers have given the magazine a large circulation in both hemispheres. In the present number "The Second Battle of Bull Run" is most graphically described, and is shown to have been one of the most remarkable events of the war. The table of contents is full and inviting.

Another Hydrophobia Cure.

A dispatch from Milwaukee on Monday states that Joseph Krebla, an employee of the Milwaukee car shops, was bitten in the calf of the right leg by a dog, twenty-five days ago, but did not experience any trouble until last Friday when the premonitory symptoms of hydrophobia seized him. He complained of a severe prickling sensation at the wound and at points along his right side to the crown of his head, was unable to swallow and could not sleep. He was taken to a bath house, the theory having recently been advanced here that a treatment of Turkish baths would cure the disease, if commenced in time. Saturday Krebla passed five hours in the sweat room with the temperature at 186 degrees and Sunday passed two hours there. Saturday night he obtained six hours of undisturbed sleep and rest and Sunday again slept soundly. The dangerous symptoms have disappeared.

Glass Worker's in Trouble.

A Cleveland, Oswego county dispatch says: There is difficulty between the glass workmen and the manufacturers again on the wages question, which may result in a strike on December 28. In settling the wages last fall for this season's blast, the workmen signed articles based on a price list called the "Pittsburg list," which they claim was understood to be the list as changed by mutual agreement last season; whereas the manufacturers hold that the Pittsburg list was to be the list now in use in Pittsburg. The workmen asked the manufacturers to meet them in committee to settle the difference. This the latter failed to do, claiming wages were settled for the season at their former meeting. The workmen have notified the manufacturers that unless the matter is settled on or before Monday next, they will not work any more until it is. The strike, if one is ordered, will include all factories in this state. W.

The Fulton Patriot recently gave this place quite a setting out for not doing better by the janitor of the church. EASY TO SEE THROUGH.

How can a watch—no matter how costly—be expected to go when the mainspring won't operate? How can anyone be well when his stomach, liver, or kidneys are out of order? Of course you say, "He cannot." Yet thousands of people drag along miserably in that condition; not sick abed, but not able to work with comfort and energy. How foolish, when a bottle or two of Parker's Tonic would set them all right. Try it, and get back your health and spirits.

Change of Firm.

Take notice that the firm of John A. McKay & Co., publishers of "The Fulton Times" at Fulton, N. Y., is this day dissolved by mutual consent, John A. McKay retiring from the firm and F. D. VanWagenen becoming sole proprietor.

[illegible] the druggists of Oswego [illegible]

In Sept. [illegible], the druggists of Oswego county met in convention, for the purpose of organizing a county Pharmaceutical Association and passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we, the druggists of the County of Oswego and State of New York, do hereby organize ourselves into a permanent Association, that by concert of action, mutual exchange of ideas, and friendly discussions at stated regular meetings, the standard of our profession may be sustained and elevated commensurate with its importance; and that for these purposes we adopt the following:

CODE OF ETHICS.

PREAMBLE.

The members of the Oswego County Pharmaceutical Association, considering it necessary that some mutual understanding shall exist in regard to the moral principles guiding them in their profession, hereby agree upon the following Code of Ethics:

1st. We accept the United States Pharmacopoeia as our standard and guide for all official preparations, and recognize a variance from its rules only in exceptional cases—where sufficient authority has proved some other process more reliable to attain the same end.

This section is not intended to interfere with the dispensing of prescriptions or medicines ordered in accordance with foreign pharmacopoeias.

2d. Although not a legitimate part of our business, custom and the necessities of the times warrant us in keeping proprietary medicines, yet we earnestly recommend pharmacists, when called upon for an opinion of their merits, to discourage their use.

3d We discountenance all secret formulæ between physicians and pharmacists, and consider it our duty to communicate such to each othe when requested.

4th. We distinctly repudiate the practice of allowing physicians a percentage on their prescriptions as derogatory to both professions.

5th. We will endeavor, so far as lies in our power, to refrain from compromising the professional reputation of physicians, and we expect the same comity from them.

6th. Since the the professional training of the pharmacist does not include those branches which enable the physician to diagnose and treat disease, we should, in all practicable cases, decline to give medical advice, and refer the applicant to a regular physican.

7th. The growing demands of the age require that those who follow the profession of pharmacy should be educated up to a higher standard. Therefore we consider it our duty, individually and collectively, to encourage the advancement of knowledge in our profession generally, and particularly by stimulating our assistants to attend the lectures of some pharmaceutical college, and by aiding and assisting them to do so.

The object of the association is clearly set forth in the above. There is nothing in their constitution, by-laws or code of ethics that fixes prices on drugs and the idea of preventing any man buying goods when the whole world is the market is simply absurd. It is only when a man's financial ability is in question that the wholesale trade refuse to sell him, and a wholsale personal attack on the entire profession of the county seems unjust in the extreme.

We expect that just and wholesome laws will always bear heavily on the transgressor, but the time is not far distant when by the united efforts of Pharmaceutical associations, the bar will be banished from every drug store and the druggist will be required by law to put forth every effort for the advancement of chemical and pharmaceutical knowledge, and the people will demand standard, official medicines.

Then the war will cease and patent medicines if sold at all, will be sold by tradesmen, where no more skill is required than to sell a jumping jack or a tin whistle. Respectfully yours,

R. E. Phillips.

THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE enters upon the new subscription year with undiminished faith in the restoration to power of the party which has shown the greatest capacity for safe, patriotic, intelligent government. It thanks its agents and friends for their hearty support during the last year.

THE NEW-YORK TRIBUNE remains the principal national exponent of the arguments, doctrines and aims of the Republican party. It is a strong, aggressive newspaper, uncompromisingly Republican, and faithfully devoted to the home interest of all America. The paper labors earnestly for a protective tariff, to develop the resources of the different States and secure good wages, good food, good clothing and comfortable homes for the people, and itself pays the highest prices to its own men of any office in New York city; for equal rights and an honest vote, North and South; for every practical measure in the interests of morality and temperance; and for upright, dignified patriotic government.

REPUBLICANS NEED THE TRIBUNE.

Every intelligent farmer; every old soldier; every worker and active man of whatever occupation; every good wife with a family; and every citizen who wants to identify himself with the party of progress, brilliant achievement and morality, needs THE TRIBUNE.

THE TRIBUNE will be good reading after Congress meets, when Evarts, Sherman, Logan, and other brilliant leaders begin to air the Administration questions hard to answer.

As an agricultural paper THE TRIBUNE is unexcelled.

[illegible] Y. O. & W. track from the junction to Broadway, at which point it is said that a depot will be established. The route of the main line through the village has not yet been decided upon. It is said that the large milling interest is desirous of having the road pass through First street below Oneida. To do so the road would go under First street near Broadway, passing along the canal and over the Nelson coal yard, where a freight and passenger depot could be conveniently located. It is the wish and intention of the company to locate the depots for the accommodation of not only the traveling public, but for the manufacturing and business interests as well. With this trunk line passing through the heart of business, and with the other two roads in close proximity, Fulton bids fair yet to utilize much more of her magnificent water power.

A Disgraceful Affair.

Last Friday evening Police Justice James Shannon of Oswego Falls, while intoxicated, was said to have flourished a revolver quite freely on the street, and in several other places. He fired at a young man named Murtaugh, it is alleged, and the bullet passed under his arm. It is also said that he went behind the bar at the hotel, laid his weapon down and seized the bartender and threw him over the bar. A Mr. Roberts, who was present, picked up the revolver and they then drove Shannon out of the place. We have been informed that Shannon has been arrested and given to bail to appear for examination. The outcome of the affair is awaited with considerable interest.

The case of the people against Murtaugh Murphy and James Dwyre of Fulton, indicted for robbery in the first degree was called Monday in Oswego before Hon. M. L. Wright. Soldiers' Widows' Claims.

It is claimed that the widows or children of officers and soldiers killed in the service or who died of wounds received, are entitled to half pay for five years under a statute of the United States passed some years ago. The matter will perhaps have to go to the courts before it is fully settled.

We understand that Melvin F. Stephens of this village has made an arrangement with a law firm in Washington to prosecute claims of this kind in this vicinity, thus giving claimants the advantage of having an attorney at home, and the benefit of counsel in Washington to attend to claims there without extra expense to claimants.

School District Officers.

The attention of clerks and trustees of school districts is respectfully called to the provision of law requiring clerks of districts to file with the town clerk immediately after the annual school meeting the names and P. O. address of the officers elected thereat; imposing a fine for neglect to do so. I need the address of Trustees that I may be able to communicate with them on matters of importance to them and their districts and I trust this provision will be complied with or names and address sent directly to me. Very respectfully,

D. D. METCALF.

Mr and Mrs. Albert Kelly wish to return many thanks to the campers and pleasure seekers of High Banks who contributed toward the Christmas present which they received. They also wish them a happy New Year and a pleasant season at High Banks in 1886.

Go to Bacon's and get your wife or boy and girl half a dozen pretty Handkerchiefs.

Start Right.

The close of a year is the time for reckoning up the past mistakes.

The beginning of a new year is the time for making a new start in life, "turning over a new leaf," as they say.

The all-important thing, then, is to start right. On this depends everything, for the chances are against reformation when once started wrong.

Don't depend on "good intentions." These are said to be the paving stones of a certain undesirable locality. Good intentions amount to nothing unless they are followed up by acts in the direction. For the new year, 1886, then, we recommend the purchase of ready or custom made clothing at Kent & Miller's, 18 and 20 South Salina street. It is all well-made, good material, stylish, substantial and cheap. Men, youths and boys can be alike fitted to perfection and satisfaction guaranteed.

On Christmas day Father Early of the Catholic church distributed 107 pounds of candy to his Sunday school pupils, giving half a pound to each pupil.

We acknowledge a pleasant call from Editor Bibbins of the Jordan Times, who with his wife spent Christmas at the home of his father-in-law, James Loomis.

The exercises given in the Presbyterian church last Sunday evening were largely attended. The program consisted of bible reading and singing, by members of the Sunday school.

A number have informed us of their intention of keeping open house and desire us to announce the same. No names have been handed in for publication.

The ladies of the Episcopal church gave a very pleasant entertainment for the benefit of the children, last Monday evening in Whitaker's hall on Oneida street. A Christmas tree, loaded with presents adorned the center of one of the rooms. Refreshments were served, and with the music, singing, games, etc. the children passed a memorable evening. Some fine instrumental music was furnished by Misses Fannie DeGraw and Cora Miller.

There was a pleasant gathering at the home of Mrs. B. R. Howe on Saturday evening last. Mrs. Howe has been in the habit of inviting her Sunday school class (numbering some 25 or 30 young people) every week to review the lesson, and spend a social evening. A much larger number came, including many members of the choir, and after the usual program, Mr. Gill in a few appropriate remarks in behalf of the class presented Mr. Howe with "Guizot's" "History of France" in 8 Vol's. It was a perfect surprise. The evening was pleasantly filled with song and music. Mr. Harrison sang a solo, which was loudly encored, and he responded by a musical recital of the adventures of Robinson Crusoe. The choir responded to individual calls, and others collectively, making an evening that was enjoyed by all.

[illegible] at the water works [illegible] pressure [illegible] canal bridge and near Gilbert's mill. [illegible] pressure registered 65 pounds [illegible]. This was the pressure from the tank alone, the pump not running. The pump was afterward started and the gauge told a pressure of 70 pounds. With this pressure the four streams easily reached the top of the mills and high buildings near. The last and most severe test was the throwing of seven streams at once, three in Oswego Falls and four on this side, with a pressure of 60 pounds. At a signal from the fire bell the seven hydrants were opened and soon after the pump had been started four fine streams of water were thrown, one of them easily going over the cupola of Nelson's mill, the gauge showing the required pressure. After a few moments the gauge dropped back to 30 pounds and it was said that owing to the fact of a new fireman being in charge of the boiler, the steam was allowed to go down and the pump was stopped. In a short time it was again started and the seven streams were satisfactorily thrown for a few moments, the gauge showing 60 pounds. Soon the gauge dropped to 40 pounds and it was reported that an oiler had broken at the pump house. By this time it was nearly dark and nothing more was done. President Waugh told a TIMES reporter that he did not consider the last test a satisfactory one and should demand another trial, which is in progress this afternoon. We are convinced that President Waugh and the Board of Trustees will not accept the system until a severe and satisfactory test is made, and that the terms of the contract will be enforced.

NOTES.

The Fulton band furnished some fine music during the trial.

The Fire department were treated to a fine supper in the evening by the Water Works company.

A large number of firemen from Oswego and neighboring cities were present to witness the trial.

Several Watertown gentlemen were in town, representatives of Hinds & Moffet and others.

The Forresters Coming.

Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Forrester, with a superb company, will visit Fulton Tuesday, Jan. 12, remaining five nights. Our readers will remember that the Forresters were here last winter and gave universal satisfaction. That they are a strong company all who have heard them will attest. The low price of admission—15 and 25 cents—should fill the house each evening. The Auburn Advertiser, in speaking of this company, says: The return of the Forresters, with a company playing at popular prices, proved an event in Auburn. It was early in the evening when the Academy began to fill up and by 8 o'clock every seat was taken. At 7:45 more tickets had been sold than there were seats and orders were given to shut the doors on them. Many people stood in the gallery and down stairs during the entire length of the play. The Forresters were the same old Forresters. Mr. and Mrs. Forrester appeared no older than they did twenty years ago, and their company, a large one, comprises much talent. There was considerable new scenery and their "whole train of cars" was really put on the stage. The company, which remains a week, play the Lady of Lyons, to night.

An Ohio farmer has a cornfield of [illegible] upon which the stalks are [illegible] twelve feet in height, and will yield not less than twenty-five tons of ensilage per acre.

Red top grass is regarded as a very good grass for pasture and of some value for hay, if cut early, although the yield is not as large as of some other equally good or better grasses.

A new and easy method of bleaching celery, where grown on level surface, is to enclose it by a four-inch drain tile slipped over the plant when a foot high. The leaves grow over the top, affording sufficient shade, and the confined stalks whiten perfectly.

When pigs are allowed to sleep in damp places the result will often be stiffness of joints, rheumatism and diseases of the spine, due to taking cold. Dryness and warmth are essential to the thrift of young pigs, especially on the approach of cold weather.

Professor Brown, of the Ontario Experiment farm, finds, after nine years experimentation, that a bullock gained on permanent pasture 2.05 pounds per day, at a cost of two cents per pound, and that this was the cheapest of the twenty ways of feeding tried.

To insure safe wintering of bees, cut two holes through six of the centrebrood combs, near the centre or about one-third of the way from the top of the combs, so the bees can pass and repass and thus reach their food. The holes should be about an inch in diameter.

Ropy milk is ascribed to several causes, but bad food, which disturbes the cow's health, is the most frequent cause. The trouble, however produced, may generally be remedied by a dose of sixteen ounces of epsom salts and a daily dose of hypophosphate of soda for a week.

Don't Hold on to Your Produce.

If you have any thing to sell, sell it and draw it to market. If what you have to sell is cheap, what you have to buy is cheap also. It seldom pays to hold on to farm produce. If any of the neighbors want a little teaming done, it will not hrut one of the boys to do it—or the horses either. It will bring in money enough to keep the library table well supplied with agricultural, religious, and literary papers, magazines, and books. Start a Farmers' Club. Take subscriptions for the American Agriculturist, and secure one of the premiums. Test your field and garden seeds. Make boxes for starting plants in the house. Make or repair frames for hot-beds, re-putty and paint the sash, and make mats for covers. If the law and the pathmaster will permit you to work out the road-tax, by drawing gravel, do it now. And when you are doing it, draw some for the roads and walk about the house and barns. Take an interest in the schools, and visit it. Neglect no social, political, or religious duty. Study, not merely read, some good books. If you are "constitutional tired," wake up. The more you do, the more you may do, and the easier it is to do it.—[Joseph Harris in American Agriculturist for Jan.

COLOR YOUR BUTTER.

Farmers that try to sell white butter are all of the opinion that dairying does not pay. If they would use Wells, Richardson & Co's Improved Butter Color, and market their butter in perfect condition, they would still get good prices, but it will not pay to make any but the best in color and quality. This color is by all the leading creameries and dairymen, and is sold by druggists and merchants.

THE PROPER THING.

Collars, cuffs and belts are made of beaded galloon.

Escurial tulle is embroidered with chenille and beads.

Bridal toilets are now made very simple as well as elegantly.

Thibet cloth, with boucle borders, appears among light wools.

Children wear a great deal of navy blue combined with scarlet.

Boots are again fashionably laced at the side as well as up the instep.

Ribbons with velvet and plush stripes and with fringes are popular.

Felt Tam O'Shanters show folds in the crowns like those of silk velvet.

Eider-down flannel makes pretty and comfortable cloaks and capes for infants.

The newest frocks from abroad are cut with narrower skirts than they were in the early fall, which makes one think that the crinoline revival so much talked of is for the present a myth.

Bonnets and hats with brims of fur or fur plush are in high favor at the moment. Entire bonnets and hats of seal and seal plush are brought out for sleigh-riding, to be worn as soon as that amusement begins.

Dinner dresses are made largely of plush this season, for this material is again in high favor. These are trimmed principally with lace, and above all with lace embroidered in gold, silver or chenille.

Jersey waists are still much used for house toilets. They are made in jacket shapes, and are usually embroidered or [illegible] with braid. Jersey cloth has [illegible] a degree of fineness never before [illegible], and has become a standard [illegible].

[illegible] and who had [illegible] views of the [illegible] feet figure and [illegible] were in the [illegible] party of us were out hunting, over in the swamps between the White and Arkansaw rivers. Towards sunset we came to a deep and muddy bayou, which we knew at a glance it would be impossible to ford. On the opposite shore a canoe of the 'dug-out' pattern indigenous to the country was moored. Away behind the trees a blue wreath of smoke curled quietly heavenward, marking the place where some settler had built his cabin in the lonely waste. After a series of yells from our guide that would have reflected credit on a Comanche brave about to take the warpath, a woman glided down to the bank on the other side, gracefully seated herself in the canoe and commenced paddling towards us with strong, swift strokes. As she neared the place where we were standing we all saw she was young—not more than 19—and with a face of surpassing loveliness. Her complexion was of that perfect brunette type only to be found in those whose ancestors for many generations have lived beneath sunny skies; her cheeks had the indescribable tint so often seen on the sun-kissed side of a ripe peach; her mouth was exquisite, with pouting lips like twin berries; her hair floated down her back in silken, shining wavelets nearly to the ground; and her eyes! ah, ah, gentlemen, how shall I describe the midnight splendor or the transcendent glories to be seen in the liquid depths of those dark orbs?

"As she stepped lightly out on the bank and stood holding the 'dug-out' for us to get into," continued the old gentleman, "she displayed the most ravishingly perfect figure I ever beheld. She was dressed in the single cotton garment, fashioned out of coarse 'factory,' which is worn by females of her class in those distant wilds. It had evidently been made a year or two before, for she had outgrown it to such an extent that it imperfectly performed the duties for which it had been constructed. It revealed a bust with which in artistic outlines the famous Venus di Medici could not for a moment compare. The short skirt permitted a glimpse of her ankles that were absolutely faultless, and—"

"I have a book here, gentlemen, which I should like to show you, if you will permit me," said a dapper little fellow, stepping briskly into the room.

He was met with a howl of dissent from the major and the judge and the captain and the old squire, so wild and fierce that he never stopped running until he was down the stairs.

"Go on, colonel; oh, go on!" was the unanimous demand of his listeners. The old judge stepped quietly over, closed the door and locked it, remarking, his American heart would be dadbinged if he proposed that story would be interrupted any more if the court knew herself, or words to that effect.

"I don't know that I have any more to tell," was the reply.

"Colonel," solemnly said the venerable major, "if you leave that peerless girl standing there holding a canoe on the bank of that muddy bayou I'll hold you personally responsible—I will, as sure as there is a God in heaven."

"We didn't leave her there," responded the colonel. "She paddled us across the stream, and when we asked what she charged she said, 'Oh, nuthin', I reckon, pop went a bar huntin' this mawnin' an' took all the terbacker with him; ef one of you fellers'll give me a chaw I'll call it squar.' We gave her a chaw and went on about our business. I never saw her again."

"I believe you're a liar," vociferated the judge as he unlocked the door; "an infernal old bald-headed liar."

"So do I," chimed in each of the listeners as they passed out and followed the irate leader down the stairs to the street below.

Nature's great remedy, Kidney-Wort, has cured many obstinate cases of piles. This most distressing malady generally arises from constipation and a bad condition of the bowels. Kidney-Wort acts at the same time as a cathartic and a healing tonic, removes the cause, cures the disease and promotes a healthy state of the affected organs. James F. Moyer, carriage Man'fr, of Myerstown, Pa., testifies to the great healing powers of Kidney-Wort, having been cured by it of a very bad case of piles which for years had refused to yield to any other remedy.

Bowers Didn't Kneel.

A policeman who was going up Macomb street the other day encountered a gray haired colored man hanging around a street corner with a club in his grasp. The matter looked suspicious and the officer demanded:

"What are you up to now!"

"Watin', sah."

"Waiting for what?"

"For de ole man Bowers to come out, inside de little brown cottage dar."

"What are you doing with that club?"

"Dis club am to assist my remarks, sah."

"Are you going to hit him?"

"Oh, no. For de las' two y'ars de ole man has been slanderin' me. He says I'ze got three wives. He says I'ze a bilk an' dead beat an' liar. De time has now arrove when he's got to take it all back in a lump. He'll come out pretty quick, and as soon as he turns de co'ner he'll find me an' dis club. I'll rush at him wid de upraised weepin' and shout:

"Ole man, you has slandered and belied me! Git down on yer knees an' take it all back back or I'll brain de top of yer head!"

"He'll claw right down fur the sidewalk an' beg my forgiveness, an' he'll nebber dare slander me no mo',"

The officer told him to be careful or he would get in trouble, and then walked around the square and took position where he could see the preformance. In a short time Bowers came out. He was picking his teeth after a hearty meal, and walked like one well satisfied with himself. When he turned the corner the waiting assassin rushed upon him with uplifted club and the speech he had prepared in advance, but somehow old Bowers didn't fall down on his knees as predicted and expected. On the contrary, the watching officer saw him shoot out with his left and the club lifter took a tumble into the ditch and laid there while the other passed on. He was sitting up as the officer arrived and walked around him and remarked:

"Well, it didn't work did it?"

The other looked at him a long time and then dizzily replied:

"White man, go 'long! When I is attacked wid dese faintin' fits an' falls in de street it makes me tired to be talked to!"—[Detroit Free press.
